18th ANNUAL MEETING W. M. SOCIETY.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the Bay of Quinte Society, convened in Trinity Church, Napanee, on Tuesday, May 30th, 1911.

At 2.30 p. m. the chair was taken by the President, Mrs. G. D. Platt, of Picton.

Devotional exercises were conducted by the Vice President, Mesdames Harrison and Campbell the key note of the devotional exercises being thanksgiving for past benefits and encouragement to trust God for the future.

The Courtesy Committee was then appointed, after which memorials were received and passed on to a future time for discussion.

The Organizers' Reports are always looked forward to with interest. While statistics cannot tell of blessings innumerable which have come to the membership, still statistics tell us the numerical and financial strength of the Society. The reports were all encouraging.

Belleville district reported through its organizer, Mrs. Denyes, as follows: 17 Auxiliaries, 4 circles, and 7 mission bands, with a total membership of 909. Easter offerings, $450, total amount sent Branch Treasurer, $2378.00. Two new Auxiliaries were organized during the year.

Mrs. Winterborne, organizer for the Brighton District, reported 12 Auxiliaries, 4 circles and 1 cradle roll, with a total membership of 498. Two new circles and one new band have been organized during the year. Total amount sent to the Branch Treasurer, $1013.11.

Bowmanville, through Miss Jonness, reports 10 Auxiliaries, with a membership of 567, and sent to Branch Treasurer $1219.46.

Mrs. Prouse reported Cannington district as having 13 Auxiliaries, total membership, 256, amount sent to Treasurer, $664.06. She also reported one new life member during the year.

Campbellford, through Mrs. Hammond, reported 10 Auxiliaries, 1 circle and 6 bands, two new bands having been organized during the year. Total Auxiliary membership, 404, amount sent to the branch Treasurer, $1471.55, an increase of $230.66. This district made the splendid record of reporting 14 new life members.

Mrs. M. E. Wilson reported the Lindsay district as having 12 Auxiliaries, 3 bands and 2 cradle rolls, with a total membership of 466 and an income of $887.07. This district also has five new life members. Easter offering, $188.18.

Cobourg, through Mrs. Roberts, reported having 14 Auxiliaries and 6 bands. Total amount sent to branch Treasurer, $1045.61.

Mr. Frost, organizer for the Madoc district, reports 12 Auxiliaries, 1 circle and 7 bands. In total membership 322. The Easter Thank Offering was $175.19. Total amount sent Branch Treasurer, $821.19, increase $120.30.

Napanee, Miss Valleur, organizer, reports 13 Auxiliaries, 3 circles and 1 band. Total Auxiliary members, 533, circle and band members, 182. Total amount sent Branch Treasurer, $1483.83, increase $151.31.

Napanee (Timothy division), Mrs. Cairns organizer, reports 10 Auxiliaries, 2 circles, and 4 bands. Auxiliary members, 286, Easter offering, $147.66.

Band membership 2051.
Amount raised by Bands $1266.97,
Total Amount raised $16149.62.
An increase of $392.12.

The noon hour arrived, the meeting adjourned for dinner served in the beautiful dining room of the Church where a sumptuous dinner was served by the ladies to the visiting delegates.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The afternoon session opened at 1.45 with Mrs. Everson in the chair. Miss Jackson, of Oshawa, returned Missionary from Kitamaat, conducted the consecration service. The scripture lesson was John 15, 1-15. The theme of her talk was, "What is Consecration?" She defined it as a willingness to do God's will rather than our own and keeping all our powers for the Master's use. Mrs. Everson led in prayer after which many testified to the goodness of God and what a great joy it was to be connected with this great missionary movement. The hour thus spent was a great spiritual uplift. After singing the consecration hymn, closed that part of the service with prayer.

Mrs. Platt emphasised the need of prayer and for all to take time to be holy.

The minutes of the morning session were then read and approved.

Mrs. Real took charge of the meeting on Systematic and Proportional giving. She gave a heart to heart talk on our Christian Stewardship and those who refused to tithe are robbing God. This method is God's great system of finance which he owns and blesses.

A telegram from the Bay of Quinte Conference, now in session at Port Hope, was read by Mrs. Harrison: "2 Thess., 1 chapt., 1-2 verses. Greetings from conference to W. M. S. branch meeting."

The conference representative was instructed to thank the conference for their kind greetings. This was carried by a standing vote.

Mr. Valleur, of Morven, gave an excellent paper, Pointed Paragraphs for Presidents, which was very helpful.

Mrs. Hammond followed giving a helpful paper on Duties of Recording Secretary. Some timely hints were given.

The shower coming up we were obliged to adjourn and dismissed with benediction.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

On Wednesday evening a public meeting was held in the Western Church. Rev. Hugh Cairns occupied the chair and gave a short talk on the influence which the W. M. S. had upon all the work of the church in the past, dwelling especially upon the fact that the funds of the General Missionary Society have been very largely augmented through the educative work which the W. M. S. has carried on in the homes of the people.

A solo by Mr. Percy Nesbit was well rendered and greatly enjoyed.

The President gave her annual address. She contrasted the progress of the Bay of Quinte Branch since the last time it met in Napanee, seven years ago, the income during that period being increased from $5,000 to nearly $17,000.

The leading men in the Laymen's Missionary Movement say that their Forward Movement is the result of W. M. S. influence upon the men of the church.

Thirteen young ladies gave themselves for the work at the April executive meeting. This will make heavy demands upon our resources and will call for an increase of at least $11000 in the income placed at the dis-

Whitby District, Mrs. Pearce, organizer, reported 9 Auxiliaries 1 circle and 5 bands, two new bands organized during the year. Auxiliary members, 106, total amount contributed $700.00.

TUESDAY EVENING.

The evening meeting was held in the Western Methodist Church. Rev. G. W. McColl, chairman, cordially welcomed the delegates to this community, the cradle of Methodism. Mrs. Howard, of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, and Mrs. Wilson, of St. Mary Magdalene's Church, brought kindly greetings from their respective societies.

Mrs. Harrison very graciously responded.

A very pretty exercise, "Going into all the World," was given by members of the Western Church Mission Band. Miss Munroe gave most inspiring address, making a strong plea for more workers, especially for our Canadian work.

Mrs. Ashton, Mission Band Corresponding Secretary, reported 22 Circles, increase 2, 4 new ones organized during year. 570 Circle members, income of $800.30. Circle motto for the year, "Hear Am I, Lord, Send Me."

64 Mission Bands, 9 new ones organized during year, contributing $1206.60. Motto, "Little Children Keep Yourselves From Idols."

Total amount raised from Circles and Bands, $2258.27.

The efficient choir of the church, with a solo by Mr. Clayton Stevens, added greatly to the interest of the meeting.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Morning Lesson opened at 9.30, "In Memoriam."

Service was conducted by Mrs. J. H. Young, Belleville, in which living tribute was paid to the memory of 30 members who had passed to their reward during the year.

Mrs. Seymore, of Belleville, closed this Service with prayer.

The Minutes of the Tuesday afternoon and evening sessions were read by the Secretary, Mrs. Copland.

The reports from organizers showing increase in interest and finances.

Mrs. Ashton, Campbellford, took charge of Mission Band conference emphasizing the importance of training the Young People and Children in Missionary interests. She suggested that the Palm Branch be taken and that the leader be on the look out for helpers to assist her, at the same time training them for the position of leaders.

Discussions on Memorials and Resolutions conducted by Mrs. Grange provoked considerable discussion, but the motions all being carried.

The Treasurer, Mrs. Dr. Kendry gave her report.

The Statistical and financial report was given as follows:

Auxiliaries 178, increase 3.
Annual members 4982, increase 297.

Total membership 5491, increase 331.
Member of Circles 22, increase 2.
Circle membership 570.
Amount raised by Circles $981.60.
Number of Bands 64, increase 1.

Missionary Movement say that their Forward Movement is the result of W. M. S. influence upon the men of the church.

Thirteen young ladies gave themselves for the work at the April executive meeting. This will make heavy demands upon our resources and will call for an increase of at least $11000 in the income placed at the disposal of our Board of Managers.

Miss Ada Lane gave a very beautiful solo which was well received.

Miss Allen, returned missionary from Japan, gave a most interesting account of the moral and social conditions in Japan, showing the great necessity for the spread of Gospel truth in that land.

A paper, by Miss Merion, Albert College, Belleville, was read by Miss McDonald. Miss Merion made a strong appeal to the young women of our church to consecrate themselves to the work of uplifting the womanhood of non-Christian lands.

THURSDAY.

The Courtesy Committee present the following report:—

Whereas this Branch Meeting has been one of unusual interest and helpfulness, and realizing that much of this is due to the hearty welcome accorded the delegates and visitors, and the expending of much time thought and energy on the part of the various committees who so ably discharged their duties. Resolved that the sincere thanks of this convention be conveyed to the ladies of the billeting committee, the trustees of the churches, the choir and soloists, the Mission Band, our hostesses who have so bountifully entertained us both in the homes and at the church, our missionaries, the press reporters, and all who in any way have contributed to the success of this convention.

erty, known as the Campbell House, in the progressive town of Nanaimo, consisting of lots numbers eleven and twelve on the north side of Dundas street, lot number one on the west side of Centre street, and the north east part of lot number thirteen, on the north side of Dundas street, being one of the best hotel premises in the Town of Nanaimo, heated throughout with steam, and up-to-date in every respect, being situate in the business centre of the town, is a solid cut stone and brick building, three storeys and part four storeys high, with sample rooms, and upon the premises and forming part thereof are five shops now under rent as business stores and fitted up with plate glass fronts, and situate on Dundas street,
also including a new fireproof cement barn, arranged for the accommodation of a large number of horses and fitted up in every respect suitable for hotel business. The hotel is under license and rented to a first class manager and doing the best commercial business in Nanaimo.

The purchaser of this property can also purchase the contents and business from the tenant on fair and reasonable terms, if desired.
Possession of this hotel property and premises, subject to existing leases, can be given forthwith and absolute possession of the hotel can be obtained three months after sale, if required.

NAPANEAN'S SUCCESS

The Western British American has the following to say of an old Napane boy, in the person of Sydney Dettlor: "In recent years some palatial hotels have been erected throughout the booming Dominion, several of which have impressed the American tourist as being quite as fine in essential particulars, as the best in the United States. One of the handsomest of these newer Canadian structures, is the Royal Alexandra, the sumptuous hostelry erected at Winnipeg by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. This hotel, which was opened to the public in 1906, is built of granite, cut stone and pressed brick and is elegantly and completely equipped from top to bottom. It is the subject of enthusiastic praise by travellers on account of its remarkably expert service, and the chief credit for this is due to the Royal Alexandra's immensely popular manager—William Sydney Dettlor, who, by the way, is a native of Napanee, Ont., where he first saw the light in 1873. To be the leading boniface of the great Canadian Northwest is a signal honor for a young man of 38. But Mr. Dettlor has come by his prominence worthily, as a glance over his career will show. He is of United Empire Loyalist stock, and a descendant of Capt. George Dettlor, who was killed while defending Toronto in the war of 1812. He is a grandson of Col. Geo. Hill Dettlor, and his father was Wm. V. Dettlor, an attorney of Napanee. After leaving school, Mr. Dettlor was five years on the staff of the Merchant's Bank of Canada, at Belleville, Ont. Then he became an employee of the C. P. R., and he has been climbing ever since. He was five years in the office of the Auditor of Passenger Receipts at Montreal; two years, accountant of the General Purchasing Dept. Montreal; then successively chief clerk at the Place Viger Hotel, Montreal, and at Chateau Frontenac, Quebec. Mr. Dettlor went to the Royal Alexandra, Winnipeg, as accountant; on July 1, 1910, was made assistant manager; and two months later was appointed manager. He is the ideal 20th century hotelman, genial, tactful, painstaking, and magnetic. His friends already are legion on both sides of the border.

FORTUNE FAVORS THE BRAVE; OR, A LOOK INTO THE PAST

Dorothy was disappointed beyond expression, and Mrs. Darnley was annoyed. It hurt her to think that any woman should have such power over her son, and that he should have gone without a word or sign to her; a sense of vexation, too, mingled in with her satisfaction in that she was effectually parted from that designing girl, vexation new to her proud nature in more senses than one.

It was from Baines that Nancy learned of Darnley's departure, and, though her face made no sign, she felt a wave of relief pass through her; it would not be so difficult to bear now he was gone, she told herself. The torture of seeing him day after day, reading his utter contempt and disgust, would have been too great.

The maid imparted the news very cheerily; but her sharp eyes were not to be deceived by any acting, however good. She had grown very fond of Nancy, and, woman-like, she had conjured up a romance for the girl in which Derrick Darnley took a prominent part.

They would make a handsome pair, she had determined over and over again, as she had watched Nancy walk across the grass, the sun glinting her russet curls, the sky above not bluer than her eyes. Any one could see Miss Hamilton was a lady born, and she was as sweet as she was beautiful. There might be a double wedding, for all they knew, when the Earl of Merefield led Miss Dorothy to the altar.

But all these dreams vanished when Baines beheld Nancy's white face, and told her that Mr. Darnley had gone away; gone for good he had, so Foster said. Something had happened, and when Baines knew what that something was she was thunderstruck with horror.

"It ain't natural!" she cried, to her fellow servants; "and she'll break her heart, see if she don't."

"If it ain't already broke," observed old Foster, shrewdly. "Don't Miss Dorothy take on, too; I never see two such pretty faces so changed. Lord 'a' mercy on us, what does a nice young woman like that want a-marryin' that beast; like enough he'll kick her as he did poor Zoe."

And at this notion Baines turned pale with horror.

"I wish I might go with her when she goes," she thought to herself; but she said nothing to either her young mistress, who had grown strangely quiet or constrained, or to Nancy, when she went in to help the girl dress for dinner. It was mystery that hung over her actions! She waited almost breathlessly, but the other girl made no sign, and, with a deep-drawn sigh, Dorothy moved to the door and went out.

If she could but have heard the mean that broke from Nancy's overcharged heart, and seen her arms outstretched in an abandonment of tenderness, she would have been happier than she had been ever since that memorable night; but seeing, knowing nothing of this, she remained in the same state of disappointed pain—a pain that was not lessened by the triumphant expression on her Aunt Priscilla's and her Aunt Anne's respective faces; they said as plainly as though the words were written there:

"This comes of quixotic kindness! Ah! we always knew that girl would turn out badly."

And to Dorothy, in her simple truth, it seemed as if she must, against all love and loyalty, agree with this, for she felt that Nancy must be sacrificing her very soul to gain this man's money.

Mrs. Darnley watched the rift widen between the two girls with intense satisfaction.

"Once married, Dorothy will have done with her for ever."

And Nancy, alone in her room, the night before her wedding morn, with none but the stars to shine in on her solitude, spread her arms and bowed her head upon them.

"Only give me strength to bear it all!" was her prayer. "Oh, Father, above, do not Thou desert me utterly."

CHAPTER XV.

It must not be imagined that Nancy had calmly accepted Crawshaw's statement concerning her uncle as complete and final. She had received a letter from Henry Chaplin, as we know, giving her a rather incoherent account of his crime, and imploring her, by everything she held sacred, to save him from dishonor and open shame; but when the first sharpness of the blow had worked off, Nancy set about procuring further information from her uncle.

She found it very hard in her own mind to reconcile the thought of Henry Chaplin with so mean and base an act; and thought she could not deny the authenticity of his letter; yet she could not crush down a strange suspicion and doubt that Crawshaw was deceiving her somehow in this matter.

When the first week of her most ness; it was enough, and her final hope, faint and feeble though it had been, was killed entirely.

The night before her marriage! What a dark, close, sombre night it was!

One by one the glittering stars faded out of the gloomy, clouded sky, and the sound of pattering rain on the leaves outside reached the girl's ears as she sat keeping her lonely, miserable vigil until morning broke. She was very weary, but sleep was impossible to her. Her hot, sad eyes went round the dainty room. How dear, how inexpressibly dear, it looked to her! Here had been spent the happiest moments of her young life, such moments as she could not understand now, they seemed so far away, as if they had belonged to some other creature—not to her, poor, helpless, hopeless Nancy!

She was tired of thinking, tired of dwelling on the past—the future she would not even let enter her thoughts; she shivered with dread and fear at the bare mention of the word.

She was such a poor, young creature to fight against so many and hideous difficulties.

"Oh, if I could only open my heart to her!" she cried, as Dorothy crept into her mind; "if I might only tell her all and hold her clasped in my arms, it would be almost happiness. She would know then I am not the worldly, mercenary, ungrateful creature she must think me now. She would sympathize with me, and heal my aching wounds with her sweet love; it is the very hardest of all that I must be misjudged, that I must watch them growing cold and hard toward me, and yet never move my lips to tell them my story. Perhaps if he were to know, he would be less cruel in his anger. Derry! oh, Derry! my dear heart, my lost love!"

The rain fell steadily outside, weeping, as it were, for her wrecked youth and gladness. The cool, damp night air stole in through the open window to greet her with a chilly touch, the clock from the tower chimed the quarters and the hours, and she still sat on, crouched in her chair, battling with her grief with all her strength, and longing with a dumb, great longing that it might end even by death, she cared not how, so that she might be free.

The morning broke radiant after the torrents of rain that had fallen in the night.

Ripstone Hall and Ripstone village were awake early, and busy preparations commenced with an eagerness that bespoke excitement.

And is not a wedding always an excitement, come when it may? Of course, there would have been considerably more of this had the bride been Miss Dorothy, their golden-haired mistress and idol; but as it was, there was a good briskness prevailing, and every one had a kind wish for Nancy, who had endeared herself to all with her quick sympathy and generosity.

Sir Humphrey and Dorothy were determined on doing everything as well as it could be done, despite the very disagreeable remarks passed on their folly by Lady Merefield, and the sneers with which Mrs. Darnley watched the proceedings.

"It is scandalous," the Countess of Merefield declared; "there could not be more fuss or expense if

More or less wonderful accounts have from time to time been given of the powers of vision possessed by savage races. During a British anthropological expedition to Torres Straits the visual faculty of the natives was carefully tested, and from these tests the conclusion was reached that the excellence of vision shown by the savages has a psychological origin; that is to say, it arises from knowing what to look for. When the civilized man acquires familiarity with the environment he can see as far as they can. Thus the power of an Indian to tell the sex of a deer at such a distance that distinguishing feature like antlers were invisible was found to rest upon his knowledge of the peculiar gait of the male deer.

SUFFERED GREATLY FROM COLIC

Mrs. Aime Guenette, L'Immaculee Conception, Que., writes: "My little boy suffered greatly from colic. I gave him castor oil and other medicines without helping him in the least. One day I saw Baby's Own Tablets advertised, so wrote for a box. I found them so good that I always keep them in the house and would use no other medicine for baby." The experience of Mrs. Guenette has been that of thousands of other mothers. Not only do the Tablets cure colic, but they cure constipation, vomiting, indigestion, make teething easy, banish worms and make baby bright, active and happy. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

"And where," demanded his wife, with flashing eyes, "would you be now only for me?"

The man glanced at the clock. It was verging on midnight. He sighed and was silent.

Trial is Inexpensive.—To those who suffer from dyspepsia, indigestion, rheumatism or any ailment arising from derangement of the digestive system, a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended, should the sufferer be unacquainted with them. The trial will be inexpensive and the result will be another customer for this excellent medicine. So effective is their action that many cures can certainly be traced to their use where other pills have proved ineffective.

There may be just as good fish in the sea as ever were caught, but a fish that is caught is worth two in the sea.

and at this hour James came pale with horror.

"I wish I might go with her when she goes," she thought to herself; but she said nothing to either her young mistress, who had grown strangely quiet or constrained, or to Nancy, when she went in to help the girl dress for dinner. It was Baines, and Baines alone, who noticed how wan and weary Mrs Hamilton was becoming. She knew just how much value to put on the red patches which decorated the fair young cheeks; she knew that it was no amount of heat which brought the dark circles round those blue eyes. Her heart beat in sympathy with the girl's, though she said nothing; she noticed the quick, hungry look that came in Nancy's face when Dorothy's voice sounded outside or her step came on the stairs—Dorothy, who used to rush in every other moment laughing and romping, but who never came near the room now, and, indeed, rarely addressed Nancy at all.

For Dorothy was simply overwhelmed with grief and disappointment. She had to listen, day after day, to bitter remarks about Nancy Hamilton, and hear her summed up as mercenary, heartless and ungrateful, knowing all the while she could not contradict the slander.

"I tried to make her happy, and I failed," she used to say to herself; "she wants more than we can give her—with that man she will have every luxury possible—that is why she is going. If she had not told me herself it was her own wish, I would never have believed it; and even now she is longing to be gone. She never comes near me. Oh! Nancy! and I loved you so dearly!"

Well was it for Nancy she was spared these laments, or her burden would have been still heavier! It was a horrible time—a living nightmare! She shrank from mingling with the flow of guests, yet she was compelled to do so; and all the time she was conscious of Dorothy's changed face, Sir Humphrey's astonishment and undisguised regret, Mrs. Darnley's contempt, and the curiosity bestowed on her by all the rest. Awful as the future seemed, the present was to her more terrible, and she grew to long for the moment when she could escape all this, even though in that escape she found herself Crawshaw's wife.

The marriage was to be immediately—the first week in September—and Dorothy had one interview alone with Nancy when this was announced.

"I have written and asked Madam Celeste to come to us here, Nancy," she said, gently. "She will take the whole of your troussseau in hand. No—no, please"—as Nancy's pale lips opened to speak—"please do not deny me this one pleasure. I entreat you, for the sake of the love and friendship that once existed between us, to allow me to act toward you as I should act to a sister."

Nancy's eyes were blinded by tears. She bent and kissed Dorothy's hand.

"Do as you will, dear. I accept," she said, in choked, miserable tones.

Dorothy grasped her hands. "Nancy!" she began, eagerly. Was the moment come when Nancy would throw aside this horrible base an act; and thought she could not deny the authenticity of his letter, yet she could not crush down a strange suspicion and doubt that Crawshaw was deceiving her somehow in this matter.

When the first week of her most miserable and comfortless engagement had passed, Nancy wrote to Dr. Grantley.

She dwelt but briefly on her present position, but asked him many questions about her uncle—always, of course, repressing any mention of his crime—and ended by saying how glad she would be if Dr. Grantley would prevail on Henry Chaplin to come down to Ripstone village and see her, if only for a few moments.

The answer to this letter arrived the night preceding her marriage.

Dr. Grantley had been abroad, hence the long silence.

Her old friend wrote his congratulations on her good fortune; but they did not sound altogether sincere, for he was in reality astounded at the news, knowing, as he did, how the girl had loathed and detested her future husband when he had been simple Thomas Moss, of the timber yard. Then he went on to say that, immediately on receipt of Nancy's letter, he had gone in search of her uncle, only to find, greatly to his astonishment, that the little grocer's shop was empty, and that the Chaplin family had gone away, some said to America, some to Australia; but no one quite knew where.

"The neighbors hint at some pecuniary trouble which lately befell your uncle," Dr. Grantley wrote, "and are of opinion that he was compelled to go away. Of course, my dear child, you may rely on my doing all in my power to discover his whereabouts, however difficult a task it may prove to be. I only regret that I was not at home when this crisis, whatever it was, came upon him, poor man. I had a strong feeling of friendship for Henry Chaplin, and I pitied him from the bottom of my heart; he was an honest and honorable gentleman, and must ever remain so, despite a hundred grocer's shops."

And with a few more kind and affectionate words to herself, the letter ended.

Nancy's heart beat with a sudden hurriedness as she read that simple testimony to her uncle's truth and honor, but the faint gleam of pleasure did not last long.

Her uncle was gone, flown to distant lands, without a word or sign. What further proof of his guilt was necessary?

To Nancy this news dropped the last stone to the barrier that stood irrevocably between her and happi-

the very disagreeable remarks passed on their folly by Lady Merefield, and the sneers with which Mrs. Darnley watched the proceedings.

"It is scandalous," the Countess of Merefield declared; "there could not be more fuss or expense if Dorothy herself was going to be married; it is passing all comprehension! What claim has this girl upon them that they should make fools of themselves about her in this way? She is a very lucky person, and it would have been more becoming altogether had she gone to church simply, without all this show and noise."

THE POSTMASTER TELLS HIS FRIENDS

THAT THEY SHOULD USE DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS FOR KIDNEY ILLS.

He had Backache for a long time but Dodd's Kidney Pills cured it. That is why he recommends them.

Dymont, Ont., May 15, (Special)—John Olberg, postmaster here, and well-known throughout this entire neighborhood, is telling his friends that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the cure for all forms of Kidney Disease. And when they ask how he knows, this is the answer he gives:

"I was troubled with Backache for a long time and Dodd's Kidney Pills cured it. That's why I recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills to all sufferers from Kidney Disease."

And the postmaster is not the only one in this neighborhood who has found relief from their Kidney pills in the old reliable remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills. Others there are whose Rheumatism has been relieved, whose Dropsy has vanished, and whose Urinary Troubles have been cured. For if the disease is of the Kidneys, or caused by the Kidneys being out of order, Dodd's Kidney Pills never fail to cure it.

ACCOUNTED FOR.

It was at the police-court. A witness for the defence had been examined, when the prosecuting solicitor stood up to crush him.

Solicitor—"Why did you hide Sullivan in your house on that Saturday night?"

Witness—"I did not see Sullivan at all on that night."

Solicitor (knowingly)—"Will you swear your wife did not hide Sullivan on that night?"

Witness (hesitatingly)—"Ye-es."

Solicitor (more knowingly)—"Will your wife swear that she did not hide Sullivan in your house on that night?"

Witness (more hesitatingly)—"Well—I—don't—think—so."

Solicitor (most knowingly)—"Ah! And perhaps you can tell the court how it is you can swear your wife did not hide him, while she cannot swear the same thing. Speak up, now, and tell the truth."

Witness (unhesitatingly)—"Well, you see, I'm not a married man."

THE BRIGHTEST DAY FOR EVERY WOMAN

Comes With Good Health Through the Use of Dr. Williams'
Pink Pills

Her brightest day for every girl and every woman is the day when she looks well, feels well and is well, but with most of the fair sex such days are rare. Instead they suffer from a painful languor, have a terrible weakness in the back, headaches that make everything seem blurred, and a ceaseless aching in the limbs. These and other trials afflict girls and women through the lack of rich, red blood nature is calling for. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have given the joy of real robust health to thousands of women who are happy today because these Pills actually make the rich, red blood that makes weak ones well and strong. This statement has been proven over and over again. Here is further proof from Mrs. C. J. Brook, Manitou, Man., who says: "After a busy term on second class work, followed only by a short time of relaxation, and a strenuous two and a half months normal course, in March, 1906, I began teaching school. I had a heavy rural school, with a large attendance, and consequently a large number of grades, thus I found the work a great nervous strain. This added to the overwork of study, previous to teaching, soon resulted in a 'run down' condition. When vacation time came I did not pay much attention to my condition as I thought the holidays would restore me, but as I resumed work again I soon found this was not the case. One morning when I came to breakfast everything reeled before me and I almost fainted away. The lady with whom I was boarding advised me to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She always spoke very highly of them, her daughter having used them with the most beneficial results following a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I decided to take her advice, and had only taken a few boxes when I began to improve in health—and such an appetite as I had. I rapidly gained health, my face had a healthy glow, and I gained in weight. I have since often recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to others who have used them with equally beneficial results, and I believe the Pills to be a standard remedy for the ills for which you recommend them."

You can get these Pills from any medicine dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

DR. JOHNSON'S HOUSE.

Presented by Cecil Harmsworth to British Nation.

It was announced nearly four months ago that Dr. Johnson's house in Gough square, Fleet street, London, had been acquired by an anonymous purchaser, and was to be placed in the hands of trustees as a national memorial to the great Londoner.

It is now known that the purchaser is Mr. Cecil Harmsworth. According to the latest announcement, the house will be dedicated as national property "as soon as suitable arrangements can be made."

Last year the house was put into a good state of repair at a cost of some hundreds of pounds, and care was taken to preserve the characteristic features of the interior, which is in much the same condition as when Dr. Johnson lived there from 1748 to 1758.

It was in Gough square that Dr. Johnson toiled at his dictionary, which was commissioned by the chief book-sellers in London in 1747 for a fee of 1,800 guineas. The doctor had an upper room fitted up like a counting house, in which he gave to the copyists their several tasks.

According to Northcote, it was to Gough square that Reynolds took Roubillias to call upon Johnson, who "received them with much civility and took them up into a garret which he used as his library, where, besides his books, all covered with dust, there was an old crazy deal table, and a still worse and older elbow chair, having only three legs."

A REFLECTION.

"No wonder they say marriage is a lottery with few prizes."
"What makes you say that?"
"Why, even at the very wedding, it is never the best man who gets the bride."

Do your feet feel tired, achy, and sore at night? Rub them with a little Hamlin's Wizard Oil. They'll be glad in the morning and so will you.

Irate Woman—"These photographs you made of myself and husband are not at all satisfactory, and I refuse to accept them. Why, my husband looks like a baboon."
Photographer—"Well, that's no fault of mine, madam. You should have thought of that before you had him taken."

These Pills Cure Rheumatism.—To the many who suffer from rheumatism a trial of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills is recommended. They have pronounced action upon the liver and kidneys and by regulating the action of these organs act as an alternative in preventing the admixture of uric acid and blood that causes this painful disorder. They must be taken according to directions and used steadily and they will speedily give evidence of their beneficial effects.

and do not work hard all your life. The man whose ambition doesn't rise above holding his job and drawing his pay, will never have any thing but work and the bare necessities of life.

A great number of the world's largest fortunes were founded on some shrewd real estate investment. Here's an opportunity for you to start yourself on the road to success, if you're wide awake enough to open the door to opportunity when she knocks.

A very small sum of money invested NOW in WAINWRIGHT real estate can't help growing very rapidly. This great Canadian West of ours is going ahead by leaps and bounds, and of all the towns and cities situated in it, WAINWRIGHT is the most favored one. EVERYTHING is in WAINWRIGHT'S favor—location, land, water, climate, etc., couldn't be improved upon if they were made to order.

WAINWRIGHT is the largest divisional point on the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, between Winnipeg and Edmonton—located 666 miles from Winnipeg and 128 miles from Edmonton. Wainwright will be one of the headquarters for the Grand Trunk traffic for the whole of Alberta, by way of the coming Hudson Bay Route, also by way of Prince Rupert, and as well, the terminus of what will be their long and best branch line into Southern Alberta.

In 1908 WAINWRIGHT was unbroken prairie. To-day it has a population of 1,500, graded streets, cement sidewalks, churches, stores, banks, hotels, immigration hall, a $17,000 school, opera house, fire department, G. T. P. Shops, with a large payroll, stock yards, etc. Do you wonder that WAINWRIGHT is termed the coming city of the West—that we are enthusiastic about it?

ly $250,000, she gathered an enormous harvest of gifts. On her 60th birthday she was said to have received $7,500,000 in presents, and on her 70th birthday $10,000,000.

There is a story that a grant some years ago of $15,000,000 from the treasury for building warships was largely used in building a palace for Tse Hsi. The simple device of writing "Yamen of the Admiralty" on one of the gates was considered sufficient to explain the expenditure to possible grumblers.

During the occupation of Pekin by the allied troops in 1900 many of her treasures were lost in the looting that took place, but the amount successfully concealed must have been very great.

We lightly say to ourselves that "it is human to err" and that "the flesh is weak." But we do not sufficiently realize, or impress on others—especially the young—that if we would walk in righteousness and moral beauty we must be very strict with ourselves, very candid and vigilant. Indeed, eternal vigilance is the price of individual integrity and honor as it is the price of many other blessings, individual and social. Conscience is elastic; self-interest potent and blind at the same time; excuses for slips and lapses are easily found. We must recur frequently to first principles, search our hearts and ask ourselves whether we are living up to the highest ideal within us.

"Good men" who commit acts they know to be unlawful, discreditable and wrong are simply men who have grown careless, slovenly and indifferent. If they stopped to reflect, to weigh, to cross-examine themselves, they would bring in a verdict of "guilty" against themselves and resolve to mend their ways. Moral carelessness, like physical, is a habit easy to acquire, and it takes trouble to prevent or to reform it. But all life is discipline, struggle, trouble. Without trouble, anxious thought, assertion of the deepest and finest in human nature as against the lower and "easier," there is no growth, no assurance even of a firm hold on "fixed" moral assets.

It was one of the most devout and eloquent of French churchmen who said that, while he did not know the heart of a criminal, he knew that of the honest man—and he shuddered at its "blackness." He had reference to potential vices and potential sins. He knew the varieties of temptation and the need of moral vigilance. Other philosophers and ethical teachers have inculcated the need of cultivating noble thoughts and noble habits of mind, of dwelling on higher aspects of drawing freely on the fountain of righteousness. To live with great actions, great deeds and great thoughts, to test daily performances and ordinary conduct by doctrines professed on solemn and critical occasions, is to insure ourselves against shabby, shameful and dishonorable acts. Good men must conserve and nourish their "goodness"; moral health will no more take care of itself than physical; it, too, requires exercise, air, light, preventive measures.

The majority by which the British Commons passed the woman's suffrage bill to a second reading was greater than the highest estimate; the actual figure was 167—a full third more than the majority given on the second reading of the bill

Notes of Particular Interest to Women Folks

STRAWBERRIES.

Cleaning Berries.—Now that the strawberry season is here, an excellent way to cleanse the berries and destroy all germs is to place them in a collander, rinse in cold water, hulk and then pour over boiling water, drain, and follow immediately by cold water, which leaves the berries bright, firm and plump, free from all objectionable matter. Try this and you will never eat them prepared in any other way.

Strawberry Russe.—1 pint whipped cream, powdered sugar, to sweeten, one box of strawberries; crush and mix with cream and beat together. Serve in charlotte russe paper cups with lady fingers. Top off with strawberries.

Strawberry Shortcake.—Make a good biscuit crust, roll it out about a quarter of an inch thick, cut into two cakes the same size and shape, spread one over lightly with melted butter, lay the other over it, and bake in a hot oven. When done they will fall apart. Butter them well, mix the berries with plenty of sugar, and set in a warm place until needed. Spread the berries and cakes in alternate layers, berries on top, and over all spread whipped cream or charlotte russe. The juices that has run from the fruit can be sent to the table in a tureen and served with the cake as it is cut.

Strawberry Shortcake.—Make one pint of baking powder biscuit dough. Roll in a round, flat cake about one inch thick. Bake in a quick oven until brown. Split carefully, so as not to make it heavy. Spread with butter. While the crust is baking prepare the fruit, using oranges, berries, or peaches. Add sugar to taste and let stand until shortcake is baked. Spread fruit between the layers and serve immediately.

Jelly and Butter.—Jelly. — Cap and wash two quarts of strawberries. Cut up three stalks (large) of rhubarb into small pieces. Place in a granite or porcelain vessel with one pint of cold water. Place over fire. When cooked, pour in sieve and drain. Measure juice and place over fire. To each pint of juice allow one pint of sugar. Put sugar in jar and place in oven to heat. Stir often to prevent burning. When hot add sugar to boiling juice and cook rapidly until done. Test by dropping some in a cold saucer. Put in glasses and cover. Butter.—Mix strawberries and rhubarb from which jelly was made and rub through sieve. To each pint of fruit add one pint of sugar. Place over fire, cook until thick; stir constantly to prevent burning. Put up same as jelly.

CHEESE.

Cheese Balls.—To one cup mild cheese add one-half cup grated bread crumbs, five drops Worcestershire sauce, and one egg well beaten; mix well and roll into small pieces of toasted bread, dip them into the cream gravy, and lay them on a hot platter. Add the asparagus to the remainder of the gravy and pour over the toast. The tough ends can be used for soup, or they can be boiled for a half an hour, skimmed out, and thrown away and the water used for boiling the rest of it.

CORNMEAL.

New Use for Cornmeal.—To keep your hands smooth and white, do not buy lotions and cold cream, but try plain cornmeal, mixed with a small quantity of salt. You will find it is most effective.

Gasoline and Cornmeal.—Dip a stiff brush in gasoline, then in cornmeal, and rub over any soiled worsted garment. You will be surprised to see how beautifully it will clean and freshen it. It also removes spots from rugs and draperies.

ANGEL FOOD.

Do not grease pan; you want the cake to stick firmly. Study your oven to find out if it bakes a good brown to the bottom. If cake does not crust on bottom it will fall out and shrink in the fall. Put cake in a moderately hot oven, not hot enough for biscuit—too hot for butter cake. Experience only can teach you on this point. If you see cake browning before it raises to top of pan, throw oven door open and cool oven instantly. Be not afraid; the cold air will not hurt the cake. Watch cake closely. Don't be afraid to open door every three or four minutes. This is the only way to properly bake this cake. When cake has risen above the top of pan increase your heat. When it is done it begins to shrink. Let it shrink back to level of pan, then remove from oven, turn pan upside down till cake is cold. Loosen cake from funnel and sides of pan with a knife and remove.

NOVEL HINTS.

Powdered magnesia will effectually remove grease stains.

When cooking spinach cook in a cheese-cloth bag, easily lifted and drained dry.

Pad the ironing board on both sides. Use one side for white goods; the other for colored.

A teaspoonful of glycerine added to the rinse water makes woolen blankets come out like new.

Clean the rust off the wire clothes line with a woolen cloth dipped first in kerosene, then in sand soap.

To insure finely flavored coffee beat the dry ground coffee before adding boiling water.

Lesson X.—Israel's penitence and God's pardon, Hosea 14.
Golden Text, Neh. 9. 17.

Verse 1. Return unto Jehovah thy God—Hosea has followed Amos in declaring that inevitable disaster awaits his people because of their iniquity. But now, with faith and patriotism, he turns to them with an appeal to repent and a promise of God's forgiving mercy. His doctrine of repentance, therefore, is as gracious as it is true. He realizes how low his nation has fallen in the guilt and shame of its degeneracy. But he knows there is hope in a God who is waiting to hear the cry and satisfy the hunger of the returning prodigal.

2. Take with you words—True repentance is articulate. It will not keep silent and so give no token of its sincerity, but will speak forth in praise and pure worship. Hosea saw that the entire manner in which Israel turned to God was altogether artificial and lacking in earnestness. Her burnt-offerings were cheaply rendered. They could in no wise satisfy an offended God. He wanted none of them. What he desired was a clean worship that expressed itself in heart-wrung words—bullocks of the lips. Penitent confessions, vows, abhorrence of sin—these Jehovah will gladly accept as good.

3. Assyria shall not save us—There were two political parties in Israel in these latter days of the kingdom. One courted the help of Assyria, the other favored resistance of Assyria through alliance with Egypt. The prophets regarded both these schemes as disloyalty to the God of Israel, and accordingly frowned upon foreign entanglements of every sort, whether they meant protection from the powerful Assyrian, or the reinforcement of Egypt's swift horses (cavalry). The foreign idols, also, wrought by their own hands, were equally to be eschewed as an offense to God and as a worthless superfluity. They had Jehovah, and he was more than all their allies and made unnecessary their hideous idolatries.

The fatherless—This is a touch of that personal history which colors so much of Hosea's prophecy. Like his own children—one of whom he called Unloved (one who knew not the pity which a father has for his children)—so were the sons and daughters of this wicked generation. They had grown up in ignorance of the true God, and were not his. But he intends, nevertheless, to seek them out, to win them back, and prove to them—fatherless as they are—that in him is mercy.

4. I will love them freely—The love of Jehovah is nothing that can be purchased. It is as spontaneous as it is undeserved. It asks no sacrifices except those of a contrite heart, and where that is found there is a potency in the love of God which makes all things new. It is ready to forgive gratuitously, and powerful to heal absolutely, all our backsliding. So it removes the stain, as well as the guilt, of our Commons passed the woman's suffrage bill to a second reading was greater than the highest estimate; the actual figure was 167—a full third more than the majority given on the second reading of the bill that was brought before the preceding parliament.

The terms of last year's bill—a "conciliation" bill—contemplated the grant of the suffrage to about a million women. It was disapproved, in a spirit of self-denial, by the women of the working classes, who refused what they themselves might have obtained, in the hope that the general cause would ultimately gain more. The newer bill and its progress in parliament seem to bring that "more" nearer to hand. This bill broadly grants the parliamentary franchise to women householders—a woman householder being either the owner of a house or the tenant of one in whole or in part. There is provision, however, against plural voting on the part of married women whose husbands possess the franchise in more than one constituency.

The bill is obviously intended to favor the single woman who has a defined position in society and is a self-supporting member of it. The equal suffragists favor the measure, if only as a broader entering wedge than any yet offered. Whether the bill will reach a third and final reading this session is problematical. But the course of things, during the past year or two, denotes the dangers of delay. The more waiting, the more radical and comprehensive becomes legislation and the more supporters it wins.

WOMEN GROWING TALLER.

French Academy of Sciences Says They Are.

According to the latest statistics Paris women are growing taller. The results of the measurement of 200 women from 20 to 40 years of age have been communicated to the Academy of Sciences and they show an increase in the average height of from 5 feet 6-100 inches to 5 feet 23-100 inches. Women in Paris are taller by almost 1 1-4 inches than women in the rest of France.

According to the same authority, in 1908 1,379 English mothers and daughters were similarly measured. The average height of the mothers was found to be 5 feet 84-100 inches and for the daughters 5 feet 2 2-5 inches. English women had thus grown 1 1-2 inches taller in a generation.

The conclusion to be arrived from the statistics is that the Paris woman of 1911 comes between the English mother and the English daughter of 1911, but she is not half an inch taller than the former and has still much to grow before she reaches the contemporary English girl. She is gradually growing taller than the Paris man.

Do business or business will do you.

CHEESE.

Cheese Balls.—To one cup mild cheese add one-half cup grated bread crumbs, five drops Worcestershire sauce, and one egg well beaten; mix well and roll into small balls; place in wire basket and fry in hot lard to a delicate brown.

Cheese Ramekins.—Four tablespoons grated cheese, four tablespoons butter, one-half cup of cream, three eggs, pepper and salt. Cook cheese, cream, butter, and seasoning until smooth. Add eggs, well beaten. Fill the ramekins three-fourths full and bake six minutes. Serve hot.

As Seasoning.—Let the left over pieces of cheese get hard, grate, and keep in covered dish, and use with spaghetti or macaroni, with potatoes au gratin, or any dish which will be improved by a sprinkling of cheese.

Cheese Delight.—Toast and butter four pieces of bread and lay in baking dish (casserole), cover with a half pound of grated cheese, then make a cream sauce of butter, one tablespoon, one tablespoon flour, one and one-half cups of rich milk, salt, pepper and dash of red pepper; pour over the toast and cheese and bake about fifteen minutes.

COOKIES.

Molasses Cookies.—Two and one-half cups sugar, two cups molasses, one tablespoon ginger, one tablespoon cloves, one tablespoon cinnamon. Let this come to a boil. When cool stir in four eggs and one tablespoon soda, and flour enough to roll out next day. Moderate oven.

Spice Cookies.—Cream together two and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, add to this two eggs, one cup seeded raisins chopped fine, one-half teaspoon soda, one teaspoon ginger, one teaspoon cloves, one teaspoon allspice, one teaspoon cinnamon, two cups flour. Bake in moderate oven.

POTATOES.

Scalloped Potatoes.—Slice as many potatoes as needed, butter a baking dish, place in a layer of potatoes, sprinkle with salt, pepper, and a scant tablespoonful of flour; then another layer of potatoes, and so on until the potatoes are used, then cover the top with cracker crumbs and small lumps of butter, cover all the potatoes with milk, and bake in a moderate oven one hour.

Fried Potatoes.—Cut them into small cubes, put just enough fresh lard into skillet to keep them from sticking; cook on a slow fire until tender, cover them with milk and let cook until the milk disappears. This is quite different from ordinary fried potatoes.

ASPARAGUS ON TOAST.

In preparing asparagus wash first, then each piece must be handled separately to test it and take off the tough end where the stalk will break easily, but do not cut it. The tender parts may be left whole or cut into half inch pieces and boiled in salted water until tender. The tips will soften in ten or fifteen minutes, so it is best not to put them in the boiling water until the rest has been boiling for twenty minutes. In another pan heat some milk or cream, and into this drain the liquid from the asparagus. Thicken with butter and flour. Cut square adding boiling water.

A soft finish will be given your chamois cloths after washing by running them through the clothes wringer.

When preparing meringue add one-half teaspoon of baking powder to each, beaten white of egg. Will be wonderfully improved.

When shortening a long coat of dark color use a white dress skirt when trying on. The contrast is a help in obtaining a well defined line.

Do not discard your artificial pink and red roses, but use them for dyeing the rinse water used when washing faded pink stockings, ribbons, or dresses.

SHOWING HIS PACES.

This Old Lady Was Particular About Her Footmen.

In that delightful record of social customs in the eighteenth century, "The Merry Past," Mr. Ralph H. Neville makes a good jest of the extreme formality of the times. Lord Lyttleton was once much piqued by the remarks of a certain old lady, well known for her strong predilection for beauty and athletic form in her footmen, and in consequence fixed upon the following method of making her ridiculous:

A friend of his had an Irish servant of remarkably fine presence, with a great fund of native humor. This man Lord Lyttleton borrowed, and instructed to apply to the old lady, who, as was well known, had advertised for a footman. Her ladyship either was, or affected to be, troubled by the most delicate and irritable nerves, which could not endure the slightest disturbance or noise.

The new servant, handsomely dressed and well powdered, presented himself at the lady's door, and his errand being announced, he was soon ushered into her saloon.

My lady was alone, and after asking the young man a variety of questions, the answers to which seemed to be satisfactory, she told him she liked his appearance much as he stood, but she wished to see him walk, to know whether he did that gracefully, a main point with her.

The man walked up and down the room, the old lady's eyes following him closely, and in evident admiration of his six feet of height and his fine figure.

He was next ordered to turn this way, then that way, then to make his bow, then to carry a fan and book; last of all, to walk the length of the room again.

Having walked the last time the man made a profound bow, and said, "Your ladyship has examined some but not all of my accomplishments, which are all equally excellent. You have seen me walk, now you shall see me trot."

With that he trotted up and down the room with the utmost vigor, until the glasses, china, chairs and everything else danced.

Then stopping a moment, the rascal said, "Now, my lady, you have seen me trot, I'll next show you how I can gallop."

This he also performed with his utmost energy, and running downstairs, bolted out of the hall door.

Time may be money, but there isn't nearly so much fun spending it.

heart, and where that is found there is a potency in the love of God which makes all things new. It is ready to forgive gratuitously, and powerful to heal absolutely, all our backsliding. So it removes the stain, as well as the guilt, of our sin. Compare Rom. 3. 24; 8. 32; Rev. 21. 6; 22. 17.

5. The dew—Scarcity of rain often made the land depend upon the dew. So the Psalmist speaks of the dews of Hermon. In the long droughts of summer there would be no living in Palestine without this gracious provision. Hermon itself is snow-capped in summer, and the moist warm wind from the Mediterranean, coming in contact with the chilled air about the snowy top, results in a drenching dew. What a picture of the gentle pity of God.

Lebanon—Here, as often in the Old Testament, not the entire range now known as Lebanon is meant, but Hermon, the loftiest and southernmost summit. From almost every quarter of Galilee it is visible. "You cannot lift your eyes from any spot of northern Israel without resting them upon the vast mountain. From the unhealthy jungles of the upper Jordan, the pilgrim lifts his heart to the cool hill air above, to the ever-green cedars and firs, to the streams and waterfalls that drop like silver chains off the great breastplate of snow." Compare Isaiah 60. 13.

6. His beauty . . . as the olive-tree—A promise of national prosperity and plenty.

7. They shall revive—Under the nurturing influences of the divine mercy, as expressed by the dew, and the protection of his shadow, Israel is to blossom forth in unwonted beauty, fragrance, and fertility.

8. Ephraim—Representing the people of Israel. The verse has many difficulties, owing to the confusion resulting from the use of so many undefined pronouns. This confusion is characteristic of Hosea's style. Here, it cannot certainly be determined which is speaking, Jehovah or Ephraim, or both. A good explanation makes the verse a dialogue between the two. Ephraim announces his intention to have done with idols. Jehovah replies that he has taken note of the penitent's prayer and will answer. That being the case Ephraim feels himself robust as a green fir-tree. But Jehovah warns him not to forget again that all the fruit of prosperity comes solely from him.

9. Who is wise, that he may understand?—To understand, in the thought of the prophet, was to lay to heart, with a good conscience, such truth as God had made known. None but the wise and prudent can so appreciate the message of this prophecy as to profit thereby. To do that requires not merely an intellectual apprehension of the ways of Jehovah, but a practical effectiveness manifest in walking in them.

"Like father, like son," said the Knowing One. "In what way were they alike?" asked the Curious One. "First, the old man, when the boy was a child, tried to break his son's will. Now the son is trying to break the old man's."

To cut brick butter for table use, tear strip of oiled paper wrapping, place on butter the desired thickness, and cut through. Butter in squares does not break or stick to the knife.

SON DEATH IS A PAINLESS STEP

THE FACT REALIZED BY ANCIENT PHILOSOPHERS.

Imagination Assists in Making Mankind Dread the Last Great Event.

It is not death, but the fear of death, that creates universal apprehension.

This is an assertion amplified by "Nomia" in The Brooklyn Times. The writer, believing that death is a natural event such as birth, holds that Nature prepares the way for it and that, though common belief runs to the contrary, the majority of deaths are painless.

Cover death as we may with our faith and philosophy, states the writer, it has always been, as it always will be, the king of terrors. The transition from life to lifelessness is so marked, the passing out of life is so silent and subtle, the change of the body from animation to the colorless gruesomeness of death, awes even those most familiar with it, and makes the voice speak in whispers even though hearing has gone from the inanimate clay that lies in all its silent mystery in our presence.

It is hard to conceive that life can go out without some agonizing wrenching or that such wreckage could come without storm and turbulence. But the observation and experience teach that nature with kindly hand unlocks every door of exit and smoothes the way, so that life goes out with silent and painless steps. Those who have passed out of life and have been resuscitated and brought back tell us that death comes as painlessly as sleep, for Mother Nature touches every nerve and faculty with its anodyne of quietude and lulls into oblivious unconsciousness the body, so that it sinks to rest without jar or tumult as easily as the sun sinks into twilight and darkness behind the Western hills.

AGONY ONLY ILLUSORY.

There may perhaps be the outward signs of pain, but these are illusory, the wrenching muscular activities, whose nerves of sensation have been deadened, that they convey no messages of pain. The story of the death struggles is fiction, the inaccurate observation of those who have no power of interpretation, and where death comes in its normal way, through the kindly processes of disease, it comes as painlessly as sleep, for sickness is preparatory, the blessed anesthetic which makes one oblivious of pain, lulls one through pleasant dreamings into that land of mystery from which there is no return.

Only in rarest cases, and those abnormal, does one fear to die. In full tide of health or even before disease has accomplished its full work of preparation, there may be dread, but this is the lingering shadow of old traditions, the work of false imaginations, the valorous defenses of the guards which nature sets; that inner instinctive love of life, which guards life's citadels and prevents life from fleeing from the ills it has to those it knows not of. But before the final moment comes, the guards don their armor, lay down their arms, unbar the gates, and the sentinels of life become its emancipators.

bled to death. The surgeon stood over the blinded man and caused a little current of lukewarm water to trickle from his neck. The prisoner grew weaker, moment by moment and at last died as surely as if his blood had ebbed.

IMAGINATION ALSO WORKS.

We are creatures of the imagination. "We are the stuff of which dreams are made." Happy the man who has this gift of turning "airy nothings" into realities. Who has the picture-making faculty which is the prerogative of childhood; who can make his castles in Spain and live in the gardens of Hesperides and sail his phantom argosies around the island of Atlantis; who can see the nymphs by his fountains and the Naiads in his woods, for whom the fairies dance in the moonlight, and can "hear the voices which in the glasses talk;" who can illuminate the darkness in which he walks with "the lights never seen on sea or land," and can by the necromancy of the imagination transform the drudgery of toil into the lights of pleasure.

But the imagination has its shadow-making power, and can people the solitudes with sceptres, change the palaces of Kings into prisons and make the proudest monarch mourn that the prizes men envied were but vanity of vanities. It can make strong men shudder with imaginary terrors, make them flee from ghosts, which are but phantoms of the mind, and haunt them with the avenging Nemesis which is only a figment of the brain. Brutus in his tent slept; not because of the vision of Philip, and the King on the eve of the battle cried, "The ghosts of those whom I have murdered came to my tent and threatened to-morrow's vengeance for the head of Richard!"

The fear of death is in the black shadow which the distempered imagination casts over the minds of men that makes them dread that which is as natural as birth—and as merciful.

BUT A STEP IN PROGRESS.

When the race was young, and before Christian faith interpreted the mystery of death and freed men who through fear of death were all their lives subject unto bondage, the ancient sage declared that there was "a time to be born and a time to die," and he who had appointed birth and death had made all things "beautiful in their time," while Cicero, the pagan orator, uttered the wise words: "It is not possible that an event so universal as death can be evil."

Life is a thing of a progressive series. Childhood, youth, maturity, old age, and then—what? The yearning instinct of humanity answers—no annihilation—but through death to life again. Not out of life, through painful processes, into "the windowless palace of the grave," but by painless passing over the threshold into "the house of many mansions," in "the city that hath foundations," where "life is ever lord of death and love can never lose its own."

THE FARM

Useful Hints for the Tiller of the Soil

THE DESTRUCTION OF HUMUS

There is so little attention paid to the humus of the soil that it is a wonder that there is any left in the ground. Many people will spend time and money on fertilizers, both green and chemical, when if they had kept all the humus intact they would not have been out for the extra nor have spent as much time and energy.

Humus is the decayed and decaying vegetation—the well rotted particles beneath the sod. Because it is dead is no sign that it has no value in the therapeutics of plant life. It has. It has a most distinct value. Without it there is very little luxuriance and hardly any fruition. It is not in itself a food, but it opens the way for every particle and kind of possible food to reach the young and growing life.

The moisture that flows along the lines of its direction, the chemicals that it absorbs and sustains, the life, the light, the air that makes it possible for the possession of the plant life, are wonderful and necessary beyond words for expression. Yet so many people will not take any of these great fundamentals into consideration and go on ruthlessly destroying it.

Humus is destroyed, generally, three ways. First by overcultivation, by keeping down all growth between trees altogether and never allowing it to get large enough to be of value as humus. Second, it is done by dry ploughing, turning up great quantities of sod and leaving these clods to dry out in the hot sun during summer or hot fall weather. Nothing will so certainly kill a field as this, yet many supposedly good farmers do this. The third way is by burning over a field of heavy grasses, heating the sod three or more inches deep, and thus drying out the elasticity of both soil and humus, and preventing the seed or vegetation planted from getting a good hold in the ground. With no chance for a living it cannot grow. Take care of the humus and it will take care of you.

ORCHARD SUGGESTIONS.

Field mice been at the young on the down, close by, and he could not get it. Roast mutton, boiled mutton—mutton in half a dozen delicious forms—the thought of it was as distressing, as maddening, as that of the peril he was in! It was a full fortnight before the wished for thaw came. Then with fear and trembling Shergold went for his sheep, only to find that it had been pulled to pieces and the flesh devoured by dogs and foxes.

SUCCESSFUL HOG RAISING.

Select sows from families that lead you to expect good litters of vigorous, growthy pigs. Keep trees? If the bark is gnawed to the wood the trees may be saved by bridge grafting.

If the rabbits have gnawed only the outer bark, wrap the wound with cloth.

A tree can be bridge grafted in less than half an hour and it is better to take this time to do it than to let a valuable tree die.

An hour's work with a sharp wire at the foot of your peach trees killing borers may mean an extra bushel of fine peaches.

If the orchard has gone to weeds plow carefully just deep enough to miss the roots, cultivate as you would for the garden and next fall sow clover, cow peas or some other nitrogen-bearing plant and plow the next spring.

There is just as much sense in planting an orchard and then allowing it to shift for itself as there is in planting a corn field and allowing it to run to weeds.

Keep the fence around the orchard as free from weeds, grass and trash as you would your choicest garden plants. Weeds along the fence are fine harbors for insects.

The best place in the world for the poultry yard is the orchard—any kind of an orchard where insects abound.

THE IDEAL HORSE STABLE.

A well-known stockman says: The ideal stable should have the horse facing north to obtain an even temperature, it should not be too large so that you keep the animal heat under control, and not have stable temperature either materially raised or lowered when half a dozen animals are either taken out or brought in.

The ventilation should be perfect and as strong as possible up to the iniquitous draftpoint. Let the ceiling be as high as convenient, and if the wise builder has left an inch or so open around the upper edge, where the stablemen cannot stop it up all the better.

No matter where the ventilation comes from, get it, and here comes in the weak link, the uncontrollable desire of the stablemen to keep the place much too hot, neglecting the horse for the comfort and convenience of the humans.

chance, remembering that for developing themselves and their pigs a large percentage of protein is needed. Keep their bowels in order, especially at farrowing time, taking care not to feed a loosening enough diet to scour the pigs. Remember, that the development of the mammary glands depends largely on the number of pigs in first litter, and, last but not least, make the sow take care of the pigs by compelling her to stay with them a considerable part of each day.

There are ideas which no catastrophe can reach. Whoever holds one of these ideas, which rises above the ordinary, the indifference love of life, which guards the scumadels and prevents life from fleeing from the ills it has to those it knows not of. But before the final moment comes, the guards don their armor, lay down their arms, unbar the gates, and the sentinels of life become its emancipators.

When death comes by decree of men, instead of nature, and life is taken in full tide of health and strength, there is fear and apprehension, because life is wrenched, not coaxed away. Imagination is abnormally alert, and has not been dulled by nature's processes, and it is from these cases which are outside the realm of nature's orderly procedures that we look upon death as the king of terrors, instead of the angel of deliverance.

POWER OF FEAR OF DEATH.

It is not death, but the fear of death, men dread. When the other day, in Long Island City, Glatz,
"The Twinkler," as he was called, shot himself, it was through the fear of death which through long years he knew was sure to come.
He was a reformed criminal, had betrayed his pals and been threatened with their vengeance. "Tell the Twinkler for me that when I serve me bit he'll get his." It was at first laughed at, but the threat came again and again, until at last Glatz succumbed. Courage and nerve gave way, and he escaped fear by ending life. Long ago the pagan philosopher wrote, "The fear of death is more to be dreaded than death itself." When the ancient witch pleaded with the magician for the elixir of immortality, he wondered that one so forlorn should wish to prolong life, and she replied: "Oh, mighty Arbaces, it is not the love of life, but the fear of death that prompts my request." It was the certainty of the mysterious doom that was impending, inevitable, not to be hastened, not to be delayed.

NIGHT BREEDS TERRORS.

It is the impenetrable curtain that hides the unseen, that awakens dread; the mystery of darkness that causes apprehension. We shudder at shadows, not realities, and darkness is the mother of shadows.
When Abraham slept and the great horror of darkness came upon him, then fear stood over him as a spectre. When Jacob slept at Bethel and dreamed of Jehovah coming out of the mystery and descending upon the ladder, he arose startled, "How dreadful is this place!" The exhilarant faith of Job, which bore great calamities unfrighted, gave way only in the visions of the night, when the mystery of darkness enfolded him. Poe, in his story of "The Pit and the Pendulum," pictured in vivid imagery the agony of a descending doom less endurable than the swift mercy of execution, while Eugene Sue told of the man who followed the tiger tamer over the country, always sitting in the front seats, patiently waiting to win the wager that the beast would kill its keeper, until the iron nerve of the tamer broke down and he met his predicted fate.

When Dr. Coolidge was in Cambridge jail, awaiting execution, he asked the warden that he might be removed to another cell, for he said, "the man in the next cell is constantly knocking on the wall and crying out, 'You are a murderer.'" And there was no one in the next cell!

The books tell of the prisoner whom the scientists experimented upon. They told him he was to be

An English Farm Laborer's Crime and Hard Luck.

One of the most interesting stories of the many concerning sheep-stealing given in Mr. W. H. Hudson's recent book, "A Shepherd's Life," is that of a South Wiltshire farm laborer, named Shergold. The man was out of work, having been discharged from the farm at the end of the harvest. It was an exceptionally cold season; there was no food and no fuel in the house, and he had a wife and several small children to keep.

One evening in late December a drover arrived at Chitterne, one of the lonely isolated villages on Salisbury Plain, with a flock of sheep which he was driving to Tilshead, several miles away. He was anxious to get to Tilshead that night, and wanted a man to help him.

Shergold was on the spot, and undertook to go with him for the sum of fourpence. They set out when it was getting dark. The sheep were put on the road, the drover went before the flock, and Shergold followed at the tail.

It was a cold, cloudy night, threatening snow, and so dark that Shergold could hardly distinguish the dim forms of even the hindmost sheep. By and by the temptation to steal one assailed him. How easy—he was a big, powerful man
—it would be for him to do it!

With his tremendous strength he could kill and hide a sheep very quickly without making any sound to alarm the drover, who was still far ahead. He thought of what a sheep would be to him and to his hungry ones at home, until the temptation was too strong. Suddenly he lifted his big, heavy stick, and brought it down with such force on the head of a sheep as to drop the animal, with its skull crushed, dead as a stone.

Hastily picking it up, he ran a few yards away and placed it among the furze bushes, intending to take it home on his way back,
and then returned to the flock.

They arrived at Tilshead in the small hours, and after receiving his fourpence Shergold started for home, walking rapidly and then running to be in time; but when he got back to where the sheep was lying the dawn was coming, and he knew that before he could get back to Chitterne with that heavy burden on his back people would be getting up in the village and he would be seen.

The only thing to do was to hide the sheep and return for it on the following night. He concealed it in a small hollow, covered it with a mass of dead bracken and herbage, and left it.

That afternoon the long threatening snow began to fall, and as snow was on the ground he dared not go to recover the sheep, since his footprints would betray him.
But the snow fell all night, and what must his feeling have been when he looked at it still falling in the morning and knew that he could have gone for the sheep with safety, since all traces would have been quickly obliterated.

The weather continued bitterly cold, and during those hungry days even that poor comfort of sleeping or dozing away the time was denied him, for the danger of discovery was ever present in his mind—for sheep stealing was a capital offence. It was his first crime, and he loved his own life and his wife and his children, crying to him for food.

The food for them was lying there men devoured by dogs and foxes.

THE COMMAND TO LOVE GOD

In Him Are All Those Excellencies Every Right Minded Person Wants to Possess

"Thou shalt love the Lord, thy God."—Jesus.

Perhaps of all words in human speech none is more elastic than love. It means as many different things as there are minds. It is the one word which when a man speaks it means no more nor less than his personality. It is the gist, substance, and quintessence of what he is; more, of what he longs to be.

When you say, therefore, that you love a man, a woman, a child, or God, we can have not much idea of what you mean until we know you. Pious folk express their most exalted ideal, the feeling of their union with God, and even describe the nature of deity itself by this word; while vicious and perverted creatures use precisely the same word to express their lowest form of selfishness.

Love is thus self-revealing. Our truest formula of belief consists not in what our minds assent to and our reason acknowledges, but rather in what our desires are drawn to. A soul sometimes deceives itself in what it says, for our words are themselves but thought forms borrowed from others, and in what it does, for few of one's acts carry with them one's utter approval;
but no soul is ever deceived in what it likes.

Let us analyze, as far as we can,
this thing called love, using the term in its highest sense, and meaning the emotion that beautifies the family, preserves friendship, and appropriates God.

WHAT IS LOVE?

First of all it is a distinct emotion. It comes, as we say, from the heart, and not from the intellect or the will. As near as we can define it, it is that pleasurable feeling aroused in us by the presence of the beloved object in our thoughts.

It is well not to drift away from this common sense basis. No intellectual process, no speech nor act, can be called love, unless it be heated from our subconscious self by this strange fire. We love a man or a book or a flower, only as the thought of the object in question gives us pleasure, and stirs this emotion.

Those who talk of loving God,
therefore, when there is no inward joy, no stir of the feeling in some ardent measure, are clearly mistaken. They may obey God, or approve of him, or fear him, but they do not love him except he makes in them some spot of gladness.

Is it not absurd then, it may be inquired, to command us to love God? Can love be forced by the will? If it cannot, and it certainly cannot, as it lies beneath the will and moves before the will, why should Jesus put as the supreme "duty" of man the love of God?

The answer to this plain and substantial objection is this: that the command to love anything essentially good and beautiful is no more nor less than a command to learn to know it.

So we ought to love the beauties of nature, and deeds of heroism, self-sacrifice, and the like, and little children. The obligation here consists in our being human beings; whoever does not like such things steps aside from the human race, he is perverted, and is a subject to the alienist and not for the moralist.

God, no matter what our religion may be, so long as it is civilized, stands for the perfection of human character. Naturally, therefore, simple to conceive of such a being must awaken in us love to him.

WHICH IS IT?

If the thought of God is distasteful to us we either have a false and distorted notion of what God is, or our tastes are perverted and our backs turned upon what we know to be really worth while.

The command to love God is a command to know God, to think of him, to come into the influence of his personality. Once we see God we can no more help glowing in love to him than we can help the glow in our hearts when we see a perfect rose, a gorgeous sunset, a kind deed, or an innocent child.

The curse of sensualism, of selfishness, of hate, of greed, and of all flesh centered or ego centred passions is that they stop up the eye of the soul. "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

Lowness, pessimism, and all bitter and base thinking not only prevent us from seeing God, but also from seeing anything else that is worth seeing. Bound in such meshes we cannot see a woman as her spirit should be looked on, nor a man for what he really is, nor any of the moral loveliness of the universe.

I do not ask that your idea of God be the same as mine, for perhaps both of us are far from the truth, but it is right to demand of any man that he have some notion or mental image of the highest, truest, noblest things in life; whatever your God may be he ought to be no less than that; and you are missing the meaning of life if you don't love him.

"I Suffered Years With My Back."

Backache resulting from weak kidneys, a bad cold or other cause, usually renders the sufferer unfit for work and often results in permanent disability.

"I suffered for years with my back, or kidney trouble, and have tried a number of remedies from different physicians. More than a year ago, one of our local druggists induced me to try and after using them some three months I found a decided improvement in my kidneys, and I am glad to say that I hope soon to be fully restored to health." J. P. ALLEN, Ex-Judge City Court, Glasgow, Ky.

Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills

The Wonders of Red Tape.

This story of official stupidity bound with red tape comes from France. A farmer's boy had a row with his master and hanged himself on a tree on the railway embankment near Audencourt. The local official of Bertry, having been informed of the act, went in haste to the place and was just about to cut down the boy when it occurred to him that perhaps the tree was not in his bailiwick. He accordingly then went for his colleague of Troisvilles, with whom he had a long and heated argument on the spot of the suicide. Maps having been duly consulted, it was decided that the tree grew neither in Bertry nor Troisvilles, but in Audencourt. The matter having already been called to the attention of this official without result, an appeal was made to the central authority at Caudry. A detachment of soldiers was accordingly sent from this place, which cut down the body. By this time it was twenty-five hours since the lad had hanged himself and of course he was dead, but this seems by no means certain to have been the condition when the first officer reached the place.

A Comforting Bridegroom.

Louis Agassiz, the naturalist, spent the evening of the day he was married in his laboratory as usual. He retired after his newly-found wife was in the realm of dreams, bringing to his bedroom two very choice specimens of the snake family which he had been studying and was still engrossed in. Forced to part with them for the night, he looked about for a suitable place to leave them and finally laid hold of his wife's stocking as a convenient receptacle.

The next morning when Mrs. Agassiz rose she cried: "Louis, there's a snake in my stocking! What shall I do?"

"A snake!" yelled Agassiz, now fully aroused. "One snake. Heavens, where's the other one? I put two in there."

MONETARY TIMES. ON OLIVER CASE

(From The Momentary Times, May 13.)

One of the penalties of being Cabinet Minister is to suffer personal attack. Whether a man be pure or poisoned politically, he can never shake himself of the taunts of others' viciousness, jealousy and ambition. The Momentary Times has always been, and is, a non-partisan journal, fighting only for the principles in which it believes, and irrespective of politics. We feel the more regret, therefore, in seeing the name of the Honorable Frank Oliver, Minister of Interior, dragged into the mire of supposed scandal. We regard Mr. Oliver as one of the strong men of the Dominion, a man who has actually hewed his way as a pioneer across the prairie and as a statesman through the labyrinth of politics. He will undoubtedly clear himself of the charges made against him.

There is a serious aspect of the Oliver incident which has not received due attention, and is the relation of a bank to its customers and in turn to curiosity mongers. A photograph is said to have been taken of a certain bank's ledger page showing part of Mr. Oliver's bank account. If that photo had really been obtained it would reflect little credit upon the institution guarding the account. The photograph was apparently faked in a clever although clumsy manner. So far as we can learn a minor official of the bank which had Mr. Oliver's account, was approached by a certain gentleman whom we need not name, with an offer of a substantial cash payment and a remunerative and permanent position elsewhere. The bank official, whose method of address is usually of the best, was so astounded at the request that his reply may be recorded as a matter of history. The applicant was told to "Go to h—."

The branch bank manager was informed as to what was happening. In the meantime by some, up to the present, inexplicable manner, certain items of Mr. Oliver's account had been seen, noted, and apparently copied upon ledger paper, then photographed. This was the photograph which Mr. D. R. Wilkie, general manager of the Imperial Bank, stated in the most emphatic terms was not an exact photograph of Mr. Oliver's account, as had been stated. A comparison of the original with the spurious at once reveals this fact.

An investigation is to be held respecting the Oliver charges. No one desires that it shall be limited, except that it shall not pry into private affairs. It is not difficult to draw the line between a man's business and his private matters. Undoubtedly there will be an attempt to bring Mr. Oliver's bank account into the limelight, to analyze it, trace the source and the destination of every debt and credit item, and generally to make public a document which concerns only the bank and its customer. This would be a dangerous precedent. The office boy, the business man, the industrial corporation, all consider their bank account a matter of the strictest privacy. Were it to become known that at the slightest show of caprice, envy or spitefulness on the part of enemies, one's bank account might be exposed to public gaze, the whole country would be banking their money in stockings, cellars and mattresses. Only when a man is absolutely proved to be a criminal should his bank account be shown to others than the bank officials and their customers.

Synopsis of Canadian Northwest Land Regulations.

ANY person who is the sole head of a family, or any male over 18 years old, may homestead
a quarter section of available Dominion land in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta. The applicant must appear in person at the Dominion Land Agency or Sub-Agency for the district.
Kitty by proxy may be made at any agency, on certain conditions, by father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister of intending homesteader.

Duties—Six months' residence upon and cultivation of the land in each of three years.
A homesteader may live within nine miles of his homestead on a farm of at least 80 acres solely owned and occupied by him or his father, mother, son, daughter, brother or sister.

In certain districts a homesteader in good standing may pre-empt a quarter-section along side his homestead. Price, $1.00 per acre.
Duties—Must reside six months in each of six years from date of homestead entry including the time required to earn homestead patent and cultivate fifty acres extra.

A homesteader who has exhausted his homestead right and cannot obtain a pre-emption may take a purchased homestead in certain districts. Price $5.00 per acre. Duties—Must reside six months in each of three years, cultivate fifty acres and erect a house worth $500.00.

Professor's Belief In Miracles.

Sir Oliver Lodge, in a striking address on Christian revelation from a scientific point of view, at the National Free Church Council at Portsmouth, said miracles were no more impossible,
no more flagrant than the interference of a human being would seem to a colony of bees. Sir Oliver was put into business at the age of fourteen. He was, however, remarkably keen on science, and though acquiring any knowledge meant, to use a schoolboy phrase, swatting very hard, he used up every spare moment he could at his beloved studies. He has been principal of Birmingham University since 1900. He is a native of Penkhull, Staffordshire.

No Quarter Granted.

This story, which is told of a Scottish strike him down when, falling on his knees, the Frenchman cried:

"Quarter! Quarter!"
"I'll no' ha' time to quarter ye," the Scot answered. "I'll just cut ye

The union stonemasons and bricklayers at Guelph are annoyed at the thought that some prisoners at the Ontario prison farm are being given instructions so as to admit of the new buildings which the province is putting up on the farm being erected by prison labor. Their protest is unreasonable.
These men, if outside the farm, would,
or ought to be employed in useful occupations somewhere, and if they have no trades the sooner they are given the means of livelihood the better.
It can hardly be expected that, after the woodenware and binder/twine contracts have been cut out, that the prisoners will be permitted to lie around in the grass looking idly on while other men are putting up buildings which they are to occupy, and putting them up under conditions so as not to enter into competition with free labor or organized labor anywhere.

How to Cut Glass Jars.

The best means of cutting glass jars
at a given height evenly and squarely is to fill the jar to the given height with oil, heat an ironrod red hot and dip it in the oil gradually. As the surface of the oil heats the glass cracks off and the top can be readily removed.

How to Clean Iron Sinks.

For cleaning iron sinks kerosene is invaluable. Used in combination with boiling water and soap powder, it will remove all the grease. Scrub the sink as thoroughly as possible, and after it is rinsed and very clean rub it hard with kerosene to prevent rusting.

HOW TO SELECT VINES.

Needs of House Should Be Studied Before Planting Seeds.

A house almost entirely covered with vines is quite as unsatisfactory as the yard so filled with shrubs that all traces of the lawn are lost in a general effect of thickets. We often see houses so overrun with vines that scarcely anything of the house is in evidence.

One good vine, trained up the house walls and prevented from rambling where there seems to be no need of a vine, will afford much pleasure, says
The New Idea Woman's Magazine.
But in order to get this result the character of the vine used must be understood before planting, and it must be given a place where its attractions can be given ample chance to display themselves.

A vine that has a tendency to go away up, up, up until it can hang its festoons of greenery from the cornice seems sadly out of place when obliged to confine itself to a one-story building. Such a vine is our native am-pelopsis, better known as American ivy or Virginia creeper. This cannot do itself justice unless allowed to climb to a considerable height, as it always does when growing in the forest and along streams. There it chooses a lofty tree for its support, and it is not content until it reaches its topmost branches. When planted by a house it will be sadly ineffective if it cannot clamber to the second or third story.

The celastus, generally known as bittersweet, is a native plant of great value for house use if the right kind of support can be given it.

It has no tendrils, but climbs by tightly coiling its branches as it grows.

We often find old plants of it growing over trees, into whose branches it has imbedded itself so deeply that it cannot be separated from them. The best support for it when planted about the house is a large, stout wire extending from the ground to the cornice or in whatever direction you desire the vine to go.

PURIFIED HIS BLOOD

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Healed Mr. Wilson's Sores

When the sewers of the body—bowels, kidneys and skin ducts—get clogged up,
the blood quickly becomes impure and frequently sores break out over the body.
The way to heal them, as Mr. Richard Wilson, who lives near London, Ont., found, is to purify the blood. He writes:

"For some time I had been in a low, depressed condition. My appetite left me and I soon began to suffer from indigestion. Quite a number of small sores and blotches formed all over my skin. I tried medicine for the blood and used many kinds of ointments, but without satisfactory results. What was wanted was a thorough cleansing of the blood, and I looked about in vain for some medicine that would accomplish this.

At last Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills were brought to my notice, and they are one of the most wonderful medicines I have ever known. My blood was purified in a very short time, sores healed up, my indigestion vanished. They always have a place in my home and are looked upon as the family remedy."

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cleanse the system thoroughly. Sold by all dealers at 25c a box.

How It Was Managed

A Union of Estates and a Union of Hearts

By Oliver L. Mitchell

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

When Chandler came home from college his uncle told him that he had a special plan for him. Chandler was an orphan who had inherited a large estate, and his uncle was his guardian and would be for a few months, when the heir would come of age. A widow of the name of Atherton had bought some contiguous property that Chandler had long coveted. She was forty years of age, but Chandler's guardian proposed that he should marry her. The benefit to his estate would be considerable. Chandler said he would look into the matter and about a week after his return strolled over to pay his respects to his new neighbor.

It was a hot morning, and Chandler in a thin white flannel suit and a straw hat entered the gate of the expected you to reveal what is of necessity a confidence. Since we have progressed so far in discussing the matter may I ask—just an opinion, you know—what you would think of such a match?

"I? Oh, I wouldn't think of giving an opinion on a matter that concerns you and Mrs. Atherton."

"You consider it very mercenary, I suppose."

"I certainly would unless you came to love each other."

In this vein they chatted on for some time, when Chandler arose.

"I presume," he said, "that you will inform Mrs. Atherton of this meeting and so much of what has passed between us as you think will interest her."

"If you desire it I shall consider the meeting and all that has been said confidential."

"As you like," he replied. "Nothing has been said that Mrs. Atherton should not hear."

"I may tell her that you will call again, I suppose."

"Please do so. I will come in a few days."

"She will naturally be interested to see you."

Chandler walked away, perhaps better pleased with his visit than if he had seen the lady he had called on. Mrs. Atherton's secretary was not only attractive in appearance, but had a delicate sense of what was not proper for her to say in such a conversa-

"Why, the one you have just referred to."

"Oh! I meant the plan of making you think you were opening negotiations to marry mother."

"Oh!"

"That's all I had to do with it."

"I think you had a great deal more to do with it."

"I don't see what."

"Well, while you have been receiving me in place of your mother you have got me used to being with you. Besides, think how advantageous it will be to unite the estates."

"I care nothing about the estates."

"Or me?"

"I didn't say that, but I shall not marry for the purpose of uniting two properties."

"Then will you marry for the purpose of uniting two hearts?"

"I must be satisfied that such a union will be effected."

"I can answer for myself, but not for you. I love you dearly, and I wish you to be my wife."

"I will be your betrothed on trial. If I see that our union is to be a financial one I will break the engagement."

Such was the practical disposal of the subject. Chandler went from her to his uncle.

"Uncle," he said, "the properties will be united. Why didn't you introduce me to Miss Atherton in the first place?"

"Because when I was a young man I was introduced to a girl whom it seemed advisable I should marry. I took a violent dislike to her, and simply, I have since believed, because I felt obliged to love her. I have had cause to regret the failure of that match."

The union of hearts was complete, and the union of the estates followed.

It was a hot morning, and Chandler in a thin white flannel suit and a straw hat entered the gate of the Atherton grounds and strolled up the walk toward the house. A young girl sat on a rustic bench under a tree reading. It occurred to the visitor that he would go over to where she was sitting and ask if Mrs. Atherton was at home. Besides, he might elicit some preliminary information about the widow. Leaving the walk, he approached the girl. She was pretty, but so plainly dressed that Chandler was in doubt as to her position. However, he lifted his hat politely and asked:

"Beg pardon, but can you tell me if Mrs. Atherton is at home?"

"Not this morning. She has gone to the city."

"Um! Ah! I'm sorry to miss her. Hearing that I had a new neighbor, I came over to call upon her."

"It's very hot, and you look tired. Won't you rest yourself?" The girl moved to one end of the bench that he might occupy the other.

"Thank you very much," he replied, seating himself.

This was all very fortunate. He would have an opportunity to chat about the widow.

"Perhaps you will be good enough to say to Mrs. Atherton on her return that Mr. Herbert Chandler, a neighbor, called to pay his respects."

"Mr. Bussing's nephew?"

"Yes."

"Mr. Bussing has spoken to Mrs. Atherton about you. He said he thought you would call."

"Um! Are you a relative of Mrs. Atherton?"

"I may say that I am, for my mother and Mrs. Atherton are as closely allied as if they were one person."

"And you are?"

"Mrs. Atherton's secretary."

"Indeed."

"And her amanuensis. She writes, you know."

"I was not aware of that. I presume that her absence gives you leisure to enjoy yourself out in this pleasant nook reading."

"It does."

"Is Mrs. Atherton an elderly or a young woman?"

"Between forty and forty-five."

"I hear she is very handsome and appears far younger than that."

He had heard no such thing. He was working the pump handle. The girl smiled.

"Something amuses you," he added soberly.

"Excuse me. I may as well confess that I know your errand. I heard Mrs. Atherton and your guardian uncle talking over the union of the two estates. It is quite natural that you should be interested to learn something about her, especially what you have just referred to, since she is so much older than you."

Chandler drew within himself. "How did it happen," he said coldly, "that you overheard?"

"Oh, I was not eavesdropping. Besides, Mrs. Atherton told me all about the matter as soon as your uncle had departed."

"May I ask if she was favorably disposed toward the plan?"

"She was very much interested in the matter of uniting the two properties. She said it would very much enhance the value of both."

"But marrying a man younger than herself?"

"All that part of it you must get from her." This was said in a tone that indicated she had not relished the implied charge of eavesdropping.

"I beg pardon. I should not have only attractive in appearance, but had a delicate sense of what was not proper for her to say in such a conversation. Chandler was a bit dissatisfied with himself for having implied that she had been an eavesdropper. He wished for an opportunity to remove any unpleasant impression that his mistake might have occasioned.

When he called again he did not acknowledge to himself that he would like to have another tete-a-tete with the secretary. He was received by her with a message from Mrs. Atherton that she was indisposed and begged him to excuse her.

"Mrs. Atherton has especially charged me to say to you," she added, "that you are not to regard adversely her not seeing you today and that she hopes you will come again soon. She expects to be presentable within a few days."

Chandler did not hurry away. He called at 5 o'clock, and at 6 he was still occupied with Mrs. Atherton's secretary. Then the butler came in with an invitation for him to remain for dinner. Mrs. Atherton herself could not be present, but her secretary would do the honors for her. Chandler accepted the invitation with alacrity. He did not leave the house until 11 o'clock that night.

Fate seemed to be against Chandler meeting the widow. The next time he called she had again gone to the city, and the next after that she had had a fall that had necessitated her remaining in bed for a few days. Chandler was enjoying so well his visits with the secretary that he didn't care if the mistress remained bedridden for the rest of her days. Then one day when he called he received a message from the lady through her secretary that she had been considering the matter of joining the estates by their marriage and had come to the conclusion that the difference in their ages would be altogether too great an objection.

On receipt of this communication Chandler stood looking very disconsolate.

"I am sorry for your disappointment," said the secretary.

"It isn't that," replied Chandler dolefully.

"Not that? Then what is it?"

"Why, I have no excuse to come here any more."

"And why should you come when the object of your coming has ceased to exist?"

"How am I going to get on without seeing you?"

To this the only reply was a dropping of the girl's eyes to the floor.

"I have a plan," said Chandler. "Since I can't marry the mistress I'll make a proposition to the secretary. It is not to unite two estates, but two hearts."

She looked up at him with a charming expression.

"Sit down," she said, "and I'll tell you a story. Your uncle and Mrs. Atherton were very anxious to unite these estates, as you know. Neither of them had any idea of a marriage between you and her. And now I have a confession to make. I am more than Mrs. Atherton's secretary; I am her daughter. Your uncle suggested to mother that the property be united by a marriage between you and me. But such proposals usually miscarry. Their plan was to bring you and me together, you thinking that you were opening negotiations to marry mother. They were obliged to let me into the secret. I agreed to carry out their plan—that is—well, provided I liked you."

"And you do, don't you?" said Chandler in a pleasing tone.

"Well, so-so," was the answer.

"Then the plan is to be carried out."

"What plan?"

THE BEST REMEDY

For Women—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Belleville, Ont.—“I was so weak and worn out from a female weakness that I concluded to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I took several bottles of it, and I gained strength so rapidly that it seemed to make a new woman of me. I can do as good a day's work as I ever did. I sincerely bless the day that I made up my mind to take your medicine for female weakness, and I am exceedingly grateful to you for your kind letters, as I certainly profited by them. I give you permission to publish this any time you wish.”—Mrs. ALBERT WICKETT, Belleville, Ontario, Canada.

Women everywhere should remember that there is no other remedy known to medicine that will cure female weakness and so successfully carry women through the Change of Life as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs.

For 30 years it has been curing women from the worst forms of female illness—inflammation, ulceration, displacements, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, and nervous prostration.

If you want special advice write for it to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. It is free and always helpful.

Certain Parts of South America Have Great Sport With Water.

A rather unique form of carnival is that held in certain parts of South America. It is known as the water carnival and continues for several days. Water is showered from the house-tops with wanton extravagance and all classes join in the frolic.

In Callao, Peru, at such times there is scarcely a street where one can be safe against attacks from doorway, balcony or roof. In Lima, when one crosses the Cathedral Plaza at noon, he is subjected to a shower bath, and as the afternoon passes the sport increases in intensity, every successful delivery from bucket or pail being greeted with shouts of laughter. Servants in the hotels station themselves upon the roofs, and for hours not a carriage or a pedestrian goes by without being saluted in approved carnival style. The street is wet from sidewalk to sidewalk. Hundreds of men and women are showered during the day, but none shows signs of resentment or of anger.

Dipper, pail and pitcher, however, are coarse and clumsy weapons of this mimic warfare. There are more refined instruments of torture known as chisquetes. These are toys by which jets of water can be thrown directly into the eyes of an antagonist. Roughly dressed men, snatching through the plazas, feel at liberty to open their batteries upon anyone at hand. There will be a quick movement of the as-aillant's hand, and a stream of water, often colored with pigment, will be discharged into the victim's face. Those attacked in this way merely smile grimly and take

An Archaeologist

He Looks For Antique Treasures and Finds a Man

By J. L. Careno

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

Some ten miles from the Eternal City, Rome, across the Campagna, are hills on which the Romans for centuries have been accustomed to spend their summers. The sides of these hills are dotted with villages, villas and the ruins of villas. In one of these small towns, Frascati, I was born. There is or was in Italy very little opportunity for a young man to make his way, and at the age of eighteen, the only field open to me being the army, I chose rather to go to America.

Chance led me to become a telegraph operator, and yet possible scientific tastes may have had something to do with the matter. At any rate, I fancied the work partly because it was a science. I saved money, and when the telephone was discovered I subscribed for some shares in the company then organizing. These shares made me wealthy, and within ten years after leaving my native land I returned to it and my home.

Archaeology became a passion with me. I devoted myself to digging for those treasures in art which lie buried in such profusion in and about Rome. My field lay at my very door, since the range of hills on which I lived were a favorite location for the villas of the ancient Romans when the wealth of a conquered world was flowing in upon them.

In my investigations I went about wherever I suspected an archaeological treasure might lie hidden. The lower grade of Italian people in that region are a dangerous class. A few miles back of my native village there is a small town in which there are about 400 people, all belonging to the criminal class. On this account in my tours through the country I invariably went armed. The wisdom of doing so was apparent from the fact that I heard one day that an American gentleman who had come out from Rome to visit Frascati had disappeared. He had climbed the hill back of the town, visited the villa of the Aldo Brandini family, one of whom was a pope, then wandered farther along the road leading toward the village of criminals of which I have spoken. He did not return.

One day I started out to visit some graves of which I had heard among the Alban hills. In one of them I found relics dating back to a period beyond the foundation of Rome. I was so delighted with my find and buoyed by hopes of discovering more such treasures that I pursued my investigations till it was dark. Then I started to find some place in which to spend the night. The region was not thickly settled, and I was obliged to go some distance before coming to a house. Seeing a dim light ahead, I pushed on and came to a large stone building that bore evidence of having been some gentleman's villa. It was now a ruin and only partly occupied.

I knocked at the door. I could hear plainly a quick moving about of persons inside, and it was some time be-

Most Canadians Have Catarrh

Our Changeable Climate is Responsible.

Where the atmosphere is damp, with sudden changes in temperature, almost everybody has Catarrh, in some form or other. The ordinary cold in the head inflames and weakens the membranes lining the nose and throat, and starts a discharge. The next cold is more easily caught, and soon the patient is never quite free of it.

As Catarrh develops the discharge increases—drops into the throat, especially at night—and takes on an offensive odor. Besides being exceedingly disagreeable, there is great danger of the disease extending to the lungs, stomach, or bowels.

Though it is very difficult to cure, Father Morrissey devised a combined internal and external treatment that has cured thousands. The Tablets tone up and invigorate the system, and assist Nature in throwing off the disease, while the salve, applied up the nostrils, clears out the discharge and heals the membranes. Combined treatment, 50c at your dealer's, or from Father Morrissey Medicine Co., Ltd., Montreal, Que.

a woman appeared, one of the lowest class, and, although she stood with her back to the light, I could see enough of her face to assure me that this was no good stopping place for me. However, I told her what I was looking for, and she asked me to come in. There were two men there of the same grade as the woman.

I was puzzled what to do. If I went elsewhere these persons might follow me to rob me; if I stayed in the house I might be murdered in my sleep. In either event I must rely on my arms, which I had not on this occasion neglected to bring with me.

Having had nothing to eat since morning, I sat down at a table and ate some luncheon I had with me. I would have called for a glass of wine, but knew these people would have only the worst, and, fearing poison, I refrained. While I ate I considered. I determined to ask for a room, and if I found it capable of being held in case of an attack I would stay there; if not, I would go on. To my surprise, when I asked for a place to sleep one of the men spoke up and said gruffly: “There is no room for the gentleman.”

This looked as if he would like to force me out, so I concluded to stay. “Very well,” I said. “I will remain in this room. I will sleep in a chair. I shall be off by daylight anyway.”

The two men consulted in low voices, and one of them, taking up a light, told me to follow him. I did so and was led to a dingy room with one window in it. I threw up the sash and saw that I was about thirty feet from the ground. The lock on the door was on the inside. Altogether I considered the position favorable for defense. I concluded to stay in the room, even if I did not sleep, till dawn (about 3 o'clock). So I told the man I was satisfied and said good night to him, and he set down the light and went away.

I was too tired to keep awake, but did not dare even to lie on the bed with my clothes on for fear of falling asleep. I sat in a chair, but even there I found myself nodding. It was 11 o'clock when I heard a tapping. Being at the time half asleep, I was not fully conscious of it. Presently the taps seemed to take the shape of the

Morse telegraphic alphabet that I had learned in America. Still I was too drowsy to take notice of it. But after a dozen letters had been tapped, from A to L, I woke up to the fact that as mine and screwed on instead of being set into the wood, as in the case of modern locks. If so I could take it off by removing the screws, using one of my archaeological implements instead of a screwdriver.

I proposed to the prisoner to do this, give him one of my revolvers and we should walk out together. He was not a fighting man, and only his desperate condition induced him to make the attempt. I opened my door sufficiently to look out into the hall and reconnoiter. A man was sitting on a stool asleep, a candle burning low in the socket. A rifle lay across his lap. He was at the other end of the hall, and we would have to pass him to get out. It was so dark where our rooms were that I resolved to attempt to remove the lock on Mr. Owen's door and let him out before tackling the guard, who was sleeping soundly. The lock was so old and the screws so loose that I had no trouble whatever. Opening the door, I entered Owen's room. He was in the dark, but put a hand on me at once. We whispered together, and I handed him a revolver.

I proposed that we should go out together, I to seize the man's rifle, while Mr. Owen clapped his hands over the man's mouth. Then I was to put my revolver to his head, threaten to shoot if he made a noise and compel him to let us out of the house. But Owen said he knew that there were at least a dozen men in the house and it would be impossible to pass them. So we changed our plan to a far simpler one. We decided to go out by the window of my room.

Stealing back to where I started, followed by Mr. Owen, I made a rope of the bedclothing, and we let ourselves down on to terra firma. There was no yard to the place, no wall to go over, the latter having disappeared probably many years before. But there was something more dangerous. We had scarcely touched the ground when we saw the dim figure of a man walking to and fro. We huddled near the wall till he receded, then consulted.

Being armed, we were prepared for a fight, but feared to be overpowered by numbers. I thought of the following as the only feasible plan: The night was so dark that by crawling on the ground so that the sentinel could not see my silhouette I might move toward him, possibly reaching him when his back was turned, and pinion his arms, holding him while Owen made a dash for liberty, or, having a knife, I might dispatch him silently. But Owen was averse to blood spilling.

Two men on guard met, chatted for awhile, then turned their backs and walked away from each other.

“Now's our chance,” said Owen. “Let us steal between them.”

We advanced on tiptoe, and before the two men came together again we had got beyond them and, making a detour, struck the road a hundred yards from them. We walked till daylight, when we hired a team to take me to Frascati, Mr. Owen to Rome.

He had been held for $20,000 ransom, and the day before his release his family had received a message from the bandits stating that if the money was not forthcoming within two days he would be killed. Their surprise and delight at seeing him walk in upon them were a sight to behold.

Thoughts as to the explanation of the phenomenon flew thick and fast through my brain, but they had no time to find lodgment, for no sooner did the tapping cease than I began to tap a message on the wall with one of my implements used for scraping articles found in excavating.

"Who is that tapping the Morse alphabet?" I asked in Italian.

"Who are you?" The reply came in English.

"One stopping for the night in this place."

"Where did you learn telegraphy?"

"In America."

There was a pause, after which came the question:

"Are you not connected with the bandits?"

"Bandits? Is this a bandits' place?"

"Yes. I am a prisoner here, held for ransom."

"Phew! What had I struck? Amazed, I tapped another message."

"What nationality are you?"

"American."

"How do you happen to know telegraphy?"

"I have been a division superintendent of a telegraph line."

"Your name?"

"Edward Owen."

"I have heard of you. I was once an American telegraph operator. Now tell me how you came to be in this place."

"I am the American recently kidnapped."

He told me that after leaving the Aldo-Brandini grounds he was walking leisurely when he heard a whistle and was at once surrounded by men, who made him a prisoner. They knew he was an American and supposed him to be very rich. He was not rich at all. He had come abroad for rest and recreation after years of hard work.

We began to lay plans for his liberation. He told me that his window was barred and his door locked. I examined the lock of my room and found it a large, old fashioned one, placed, as I have mentioned, on the inside. My neighbor told me that the lock on his door had been removed to the outside. I presumed that it was the same kind

Sir Edward Carson Disobeyed Instructions to Good Purpose.

It is not generally known that, in his school days, Sir Edward Carson, M.P., the eminent British counsel, was a first-rate cricketer and also displayed decidedly pugilistic tendencies. A story is related of how his school eleven, of which he was captain, challenged the team of a regiment to a match. A dispute arose, and, neither side being willing to give way, Sir Edward suggested, by way of settling the matter, that he and the captain of the opposition side should "fight it out." The soldier, however, declined.

Sir Edward intended to be an architect at first, but the law secured him.

Here is a story showing the extraordinary nerve and judgment of Sir Edward. He was counsel for the Government in a political case, and was actually on his legs when a telegram was put into his hand. Opening it, he found that it contained, in the Government cipher, instructions to have the case postponed. It was a trying moment, for he knew that postponement would be fatal. Yet he did not hesitate; he decided to disobey the instructions, and went on with the case.

At the end of the day, the telegram was discovered to be a forgery, though it has never been discovered yet how those who sent it obtained the Government cipher.

In the old days of the Balfour regime in Ireland, Sir Edward was examining witnesses on the subject of land values. The first gentleman who entered the box had a host of details in his pocket-book as to the acreage, quality, and possessions of the small estate.

He was followed by Mr. Murphy, an independent witness, who corroborated his predecessor with amazing accuracy. Even to the last chicken and inch of ground were the two reports identical. "Do you know the last witness?" said Sir Edward, in his rich Irish brogue.

Mr. Murphy looked innocently at the counsel, and answered "No." Sir Edward Carson looked solemnly at the man, and asked Mr. Murphy, "Did you ever come across a coincidence?"

The witness carefully examined his book, then, turning to his questioner with a gleam of light in his eye, replied, "Yes, I did, Mr. Carson, but I forgot to put it down!"

Eleven Years In Water.

Having been tossed about by the sea for more than eleven years, a life-preserver from the steamer Portland, wrecked in 1888, was recently picked up in a fair state of preservation.

Working an Abandoned Mine.

"Ever hear the story of the eggs that had been kept in cold storage for 10 years?"

"No."

"Dende."

Hennequin's Infant Tablets

Save Babies' Lives. For Babies and Small Children. (Made in France.)

Dr. Hennequin's Infant Tablets saved our little girl's life. Three doctors said she could not live. The Tablets cured her.—Mr. E. R. McBride, Napanee, Ont.

My baby was so weak from sickness that he could hardly walk. We thought he would die. We could find nothing to help him. I was given a sample package of three Hennequin Tablets; we used them; I saw a change at once. We secured the Tablets and our baby improved every day, and is now a bright, fat, good natured boy; you could not believe he was the same child. They certainly cured my baby and saved his life. I believe them to be the best medicine ever sold for babies. Mothers if your babies are not well take my advice and try these Tablets.—Mrs. JAMES RIDDELL, Barrydale, Ont.

We have hundreds of such letters. If the Tablets were not what you need we would not offer to give them away and prepay them. If your baby is not well send for trial package. Hennequin Tablets have the letter "H" stamped upon them—this is your guarantee. All dealers, 25c per package, or 5 for $1.00 sent postpaid to any address.

The next business was the President's annual report:

PRESIDENTS ANNUAL REPORT.

On Thursday evening May 9th., 1907, we met in the rooms of the Public Library and organized this Society. At that meeting you elected me President, and have honored me with re-election at each annual meeting since that time. It is needless for me to tell you how much I have enjoyed the work, and it is with particular pride that I review the work of this last year,—the fourth of our existence.

PUBLIC MEETINGS. 1910-11.

We have held eight public meetings at which the following lectures have been given:—

Oct. 21st., 1910.—The Old Training and the New" by Mr. James L. Hughes, of Toronto.

Nov. 25th., "1910,—Provincial and Local Archives," by Mr. Alexander Fraser, M. A. of Toronto.

Dec. 10th., 1910,—"Life and Manners in Scotland One Hundred Years Ago," by Prof. J. L. Morrison of Queens.

Jan. 27th., 1911.—"The Referendum," by Prof. O. D. Shelton of Queens.

Feb. 24th., 1911.—"The Genesis and Development of the Hudson's Bay Company," by W. S. Herrington K. C.

March 31st., 1911.—"Pompeii" a Walk through the Streets of a once Buried City" by Prof. G. W. Johnston, of the University of Toronto.

April 26th., 1911.—"The Life of Robert Louis Stevenson," by Prof. Alexander Laird, of the Royal Military College.

May 26th., 1911.—"The Roman Occupation of Britain," by Prof. G. Oswald Smith of the University of Toronto.

All of our meetings have been well attended, and I think I can safely state that the lectures provided have been of a very high standard, with a great variety of subjects. In providing speakers for you, it is not always possible to secure just the man we perhaps would wish. We have been particularly fortunate, and I have endeavored to impress upon each speaker the fact that the time and work given so cheerfully for our Society is thoroughly appreciated.

During the year our collection has grown steadily. The various Societies have continued to send us their publications and many residents of the Town and County have presented records and documents for our archives.

Perhaps the most important addition we have received during the year is the copies of "The Napanee Standard" presented by Mr. T. S. Henry. Although

RAGING HEADACHE STOPPED AT ONCE

When He Took "Fruit-a-tives"

SHANLY, ONT., Sept. 23rd, 1910. "You certainly have the Greatest discovered Headache Cure in the world. Before "Fruit-a-tives" came before the public, I suffered tortures from Headaches caused by Stomach Disorders.

"One of your travellers called on me when I had one of my raging headaches and had my head almost raw from external applications.

"I hated to see any person coming into the store (much less a commercial traveller) and I told him very curtly that I had a headache but he insisted on my trying "Fruit-a-tives".

"I did so, with what I would call amazing results. They completely cured me and since then (nearly six years ago) it is only necessary for me to take one occasionally to preserve me in my present good health. I was 65 years old yesterday and have been a general store keeper at the above address for twenty-five years".

WM. PITT

As Mr. Pitt says "Fruit-a-tives" is the greatest headache cure in the world.

Dealers everywhere have "Fruit-a-tives" at 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50 or trial size, 25c. or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Many of you have attended every meeting, and with the new comers as welcome additions to our circle, let each endeavour to make the coming year the best in our history. Article 2 of our Constitution reads as follows:—"Its objects shall be to engage in the collection, preservation, exhibition and publication of materials for the study of history, especially the history of the County of Lennox and Addington; to this end studying the archaeology of the County, acquiring documents and manuscripts, obtaining narratives and records of pioneers, conducting a library of historical reference, maintaining a gallery of historical portraiture, publishing and otherwise diffusing information relative to the history of the County and of the Dominion, and in general encouraging and developing within this County the study of History."

Let everyone remember that Article, and do some work during the coming year for the Lennox and Addington Historical Society.

CLARENCE M. WARNER,

President.

Napanee, Ont., May 25th, 1911.

The election of officers for the coming year was then proceeded with, and on motion of Dr. R. A. Leonard, seconded by Mr. E. R. Checkley, the following officers were unanimously re-elected:

Honorary Presidents—James Daly Esq., W. S. Herrington, K. C.

President—Clarence M. Warner.

Vice President—Mrs. A. W. Grange.

Sec-Treas—Ulysses J. Flach, Esq.

Committee—Mrs. Henry T. Forward, Uriah Wilson, Esq., M. P., Rev. A. MacDonald, George D. Hawley, Esq., Frederick Burrows, Esq.

When the business was concluded, the President introduced Professor G. Oswald

MOSCOW.

George Barnes has moved here. Major J. A. Amey has purchased an auto car.

Mrs. Amos Huffman received word of the death of her father, Captain William Montgomery, of Kingston.

Mrs. James Denyes, of Odessa, who is staying with her daughter, Mrs. F. P. Johnston, is seriously ill.

ODESSA.

Mrs. W. H. Dougherty entertained about sixty of the young people on the evening of the 24th. Fireworks, games, etc., formed the entertainment and everyone thoroughly enjoyed themselves, and voted Mrs. Dougherty an ideal hostess.

Miss Wilson, principal of school and assistant teacher, accompanied by about forty of her pupils spent Saturday, May 27th, picnicing at Millhaven.

Mrs. Asselstine moved this week in the house vacated by George Randolph.

Mrs. L. Sharp is improving and is at present at her daughter's, Mrs. M. McDonald's.

MARYSVILLE.

Mr. Editor,—You must think me a very undutiful correspondent the way I have been so neglectful in sending you some items before this but hope to do better in the future.

The farmers are all through seeding and in fact some are through planting, while others are only preparing to do so.

The Mr. McMills' are busy fixing up their residence in Napanee, where they intend moving soon. We are all sorry to see them leave for they will be greatly missed.

Arthur Dufco happened with a sad mishap on Sunday by having his elbow put out of joint.

A few sports spent the holiday out of the burgh.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Meagher and son Jack spent Tuesday in Belleville.

CAMDEN EAST.

The past week has been very warm since the beautiful rain, which did so much good last week, and everything is looking fine. The trees are beautiful with their foliage.

The many friends of Mr. M. Conger are pleased to see him on the streets again, after his illness.

The many friends of Miss Fannie Scott, trained nurse, were pleased to see her smiling face in our midst, after being gone so long to the Northwest.

Miss Nellie Hicks, Newburgh, spent Sunday last with her mother, Mrs. Johnson.

Mrs. L. Hartman returned home from Odessa, where she spent a week with her sister, Miss Linnie Snider and other relatives.

Mr. James Skinner is improving his place, giving his house a coat of white paint, also giving the window shutters a coat of green, which adds greatly to the appearance of the place.

Mrs. S. Galbraith returned home from her daughter-in-law's, Mrs. J. Galbraith's, where she spent a limited time with her in Bethel street.

The cheese factory commenced to make cheese last Saturday evening for the first night of the season, it being warm.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Longmore have gone to Campbellford to visit their son for a week.

Mr. and Mrs. Benn, Moscow, spent Tuesday last with Mr. and Mrs. John Judge.

Miss Bertie Parrott has gone to Flinton to visit her father, Mr. B. Parrott, for a few days, and spent the 24th in the back country.

Mrs. Nugent, Newburgh, is spending their old home. On Thursday evening the L. O. L. presented him with a beautiful address and a handsome fur coat as a farewell gift. An excellent lunch was also served. He and his estimable wife certainly go out from our midst with hearty good wishes for their future. The Roman Catholics also presented him with a purse of gold.

A handsome oak pulpit, given by Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Bliss and Mrs. Howard in memory of their father, the late Jas. Patterson, was dedicated by Bishop Mills on May 10th, at St. Alban's church, where confirmation was also held.

Mr. J. Eves, of Kingston, has taken possession of the Royal Hotel, lately purchased from John McMullen.

At the Storming of Magdala.

Dr. James Sinclair, the eldest of the King's honorary physicians, has entered upon his 80th year, having been born at Berwick-on-Tweed. Educated at the University of Edinburgh, he gained his first commission in the Army Medical Department from the Royal College of Surgeons of that city; served in Ceylon till 1857, and with the 2nd Queen's Royal Regiment in Malta, Corfu and Gibraltar till 1863; and was with the 33rd Duke of Wellington's Regiment in Bombay and Seiple in 1865.

Proceeding with the regiment to Abyssinia in 1867, he was present at the storming and capture of Magdala in 1868, was mentioned in despatches, promoted for valuable services rendered during the campaign, and was awarded the medal. Since the year 1876 he has been principal medical officer at various times in Bermuda, South Africa, and the Transvaal, Aldershot, Malta, and Ireland. Dr. Sinclair has been on the retired list since 1892.

Failed in an Emergency.

The man who said he did not see what good his life insurance would do him until he was dead must have been a helpless object for the survivors of the accident. Lake him is the farmer of a Faldreath village of whom a London paper tells.

He had been advised from time to time to insure his house against fire. The agent, Sandy McLeay, could never get the old man to sign and was forced to listen to the familiar argument that "his house would never go on fire."

The unexpected happened, however, and the neighbors were astonished when the old man, instead of trying to save his goods, ran wildly up and down the village, crying:

steadily. The various Societies are continued to send us their publications and many residents of the Town and County have presented records and documents for our archives.

Perhaps the most important addition we have received during the year is the copies of "The Napanee Standard" presented by Mr. T. S. Henry. Although this is not a complete set, there are several of the early volumes complete and a great many odd numbers. They are not arranged in convenient form for reference as yet, but I hope to have them so arranged before our next meeting in October. Thirty-two separate donations have been made, making the total number received to date, one hundred and seventy-five. As many of the above comprise several hundred separate articles, you will appreciate somewhat the size of our collection.

I have spent considerable time in making lists of all possessions, and when they are complete, I hope to introduce a card system which will enable any one looking for special facts to find them readily. This work will probably take one or two years.
In the meantime, it is hoped that every one will remember to collect material for this—the only historical repository in the County. A careful record of each article is given, with the name of the donor and date; and many interesting records have been presented by citizens whose friends have departed this life in order that they may be preserved to perpetuate their memory.

During the year, Dr. William Canniff, to whom we of this County owe so much for his excellent book, "A History of the Early Settlement of Upper Canada," passed away. He died at Belleville, Ontario, on October 18th, 1904. At our meeting held on October 21st, 1910, a sketch of his life was given with a brief history of the work he has done for our Society. The documents he presented to us on June 29th, 1909, are all listed, and, when properly carded, will be of great value for any one wishing to look up the militia record of this district during the war of 1812-1814.

The Independent Order of Foresters through their Supreme Chief Ranger, Elliott G. Stevenson, Esq., presented us with a beautiful large walnut table on October 10th, 1910. The table made a splendid addition to our furniture, and was just what was required for the work.

Our second volume of "Papers and Records," was published in September. Just previous to its publication I prepared an index for the first volume and sent a copy to those who had bought volume one. The second is issued with an index and contains some interesting local history. Any one who is a member of the Society is entitled to a free copy. For others the price is 25c. Those little books are sent to all of the Historical Societies in the Province, and they preserve in good form many papers which might otherwise be lost.

I attended the annual meeting of the Ontario Historical Society held at Brockville, July 13th and 14th, and read our report, which appears in the annual volume printed by that Society. Their next meeting is to be held in Brantford, on June 1st, 2nd and 3rd, and it would be a pleasure to have any of our members attend these meetings. I hope to go, and intend to extend to the Society an invitation to meet in Napanee in 1912. We could give the delegates from all parts of Ontario a very interesting time here, and with Quinte Bay and its historic landmarks so easily accessible, could make a day on the water a feature.

THE FUTURE.

It is with pleasure that I announce that one of our Honorary Presidents, Mr. Herrington, has consented to prepare for publication the material in the Casey scrap-books. These, as you know, contain hundreds of articles written by the late Mr. Thomas W. Casey on the history of this County. They require to be carefully edited and arranged, in order that they may form a connected history, and this will require many hours of labour. When the work is done, we shall endeavor to publish them with the funds of the Society.
We are certainly fortunate in being able to have this work done by such an excellent writer and authority on Canadian History.

We expect to have eight public meetings next year, and already have the promise of five lectures. Some of our old favourites have promised to return, and of course there will be some new faces.

Again let me thank you for the honor you have conferred on me. This is the thirtieth meeting, and certainly much has been done to strengthen the bond of Historical fellowship in the County.

President—Clarence M. Warner.
Vice President—Mrs. A. W. Grange.
Sec-Treas—Ulysses J. Flach, Esq.
Committee—Mrs. Henry T. Forward, Uriah Wilson, Esq., M. P., Rev. A. Macdonald, George D. Hawley, Esq., Frederick Burrows, Esq.

When the business was concluded, the President introduced Professor G. Oswald Smith, of the University of Toronto, who delivered a most interesting and instructive lecture on "The Roman Occupation of Great Britain."

Prof. Smith gave a short outline of the history of the Roman conquest paying particular attention to the length of time the Romans occupied the country, by this means showing that there were many years for peaceful development. We may gather a splendid idea of this by comparing that time with the period from the discovery of America in 1492 to the present day, the two being about the same. He then introduced an excellent series of lantern views, showing the remains as they are to-day.
With each picture Prof. Smith explained how each fort, wall, church or tower looked before being destroyed and by means of views of Roman buildings, still standing on different parts of the continent of Europe, made the subject very clear. His pictures were particularly interesting and well chosen to cover his subject.

After the lecture the President of the Society thanked Prof. Smith for coming to Napanee and expressed the wish that the speaker might return at some future date.
The meeting was well attended and the material provided was a fitting ending for the fourth year of successful work by this progressive and enthusiastic organization.
At 10 p.m. the meeting was closed with "God Save the King."

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury,

Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them.
Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J.

the blood and mucous surfaces of the system.

Properly Resented.

An extremely timid widow living alone in the suburbs of the city was afraid that agents and tramps would discover she had no protector, so she wasted no words upon them. Answering a ring at the front door, the man standing before her asked:

"Is the gentleman of the house at home?"

"No, he is not," said the widow shortly.

"Do you think," the stranger mildly persisted, "the would be interested in a chemical fire extinguisher warranted to put out the fiercest fire if taken in the beginning?"

"No," replied the widow, deeply shocked, "I'm sure he wouldn't be,
for he's in no need of one."

The agent is still wondering why she slammed the door so hard in his face.

needed, and was very welcome. The gardens are getting all the attention now.

Mrs. W. Neilson of Kingston, who spent the past few weeks with her mother, Mrs. J. Poward, left on Tuesday for Spy Hill, Sask., to join her family. They will reside there in future.

Miss Polly and Miss Adajare visiting their sister, Miss Pringle.

Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Montgomery, of the Georgian Bay district, paid a visit to the Island.

Mrs. Thos. Polly arrived home this week from Teeswater, Ont., where she spent the winter with her daughter.
She was accompanied home by her niece, Miss Lindsay.

Miss Kaadtman, of Jamestown, N.
Y., arrived here on Sunday to be with her brother Mr. W. Allen, who left on Tuesday for his new home in the West.
A large crowd was at the boat to wish him bon voyage. On the eve of his departure the A. O. U. W. met with him in their lodge room and spent a social time, serving cake and ice cream, after which they presented their comrade with an address and purse of gold. Excellent speeches were delivered by the different members, all voicing the one sentiment of regret that Mr. and Mrs. Allen were leaving forced to listen to the familiar argument that "this house would never burn on fire."

The unexpected happened, however, and the neighbors were astonished when the old man, instead of trying to save his goods, ran wildly up and down the village, crying:

"Whaur's it! mon Sandy noo?
Whaur's that insurance-come! Ye can never get a body when ye're needin' him!"

They Traded Horses.

"Two palfraces once hunted in my camp," said an Indian who had a high opinion of the business astuteness of white men. "They spent the evening with me, and over the fire and firewater, they began to barter and traffic and to make deals and dickers."

"Finally Bill said:
"Sam, let's trade hosses—my bay
for your roan."

"It's a go," Sam agreed. "The trade's a go. Shake on it, partner."

"They shook hands. Then Bill said with a loud laugh:

"Sam, I've bested you this time. My hoss is dead. Died yesterday."

"So's mine dead," said Sam. "Died this mornin'. And, what's more, I've took his shoes off!"

Grappling With the Menu.

An unwise providence had guided Giles toward a fairly fashionable London restaurant. He could not understand a word of French; but, determined that he would not unnecessarily display his ignorance before the waiter, he pointed to an item and said:
"I'll have some of that, please."

The waiter looked compassionate.
"I'm sorry, sir," he said, gently,
"but the band is playing that just at present."

PATIENTS NEVER LEAVE IT

PLAQUE SUFFERERS IN HARBIN HOSPITAL.

Surgeons, Nurses and Assistants
All Wear Muffling
Masks.

The winter weather with its bright sun is so gloriously exhilarating and the little Mongol ponies hitched alongside the big Russian horses are such scurriers that one forgets all about the plague in a sleigh drive over the snow-covered ground outside the town, writes a Harbin, Manchuria, correspondent. Our destination—it was a fine February day when the plague was at its height in this city—was the plague hospital, two and a half miles outside the town. Dr. Paul Haffkine, who is in charge, had kindly consented to take me through.

The sentry, at the entrance of the vast enclosure, one of the 280 men who formed a cordon around it, permitted us to pass. One of the twelve women nurses of the Russian staff admitted me to the doctor's quarters. Some of the staff were in ordinary clothes, but most wore the white gowns that are constantly changed, the monk-like hoods thrown back.

We began to prepare for going into the hospital, an extensive performance. Dr. Haffkine wears at all times a pair of high rubber boots and a white apron-like coat to his knees. He now puts on a small jacket over this for warmth and over the whole a heavy, thickly-woven white coat with a hood to it.

ELABORATE PREPARATIONS.

Meanwhile, a mask, a pad of gauze with strings attached, was being tied over the lower part of my face by one of the nurses. Another was muffling Dr. Haffkine, while a third was gaily chattering as she prepared herself to go along with us. Next I am fastened into a heavy white canvas union suit, and the trousers are tied tightly round my ankles and the sleeves round the wrists. Over this comes a white coat; a hat ties down over the ears and a hood goes over the hat. My feet are put into heavy rubber shoes; then the anti-plague outfit is complete. But is no easy matter breathing through the sieve saturated with carbolic solution, though this we know is the only certain method of warding off the bacilli, by destroying them before they enter mouth or nostrils.

The little nurse is still talking briskly behind her muffling mask as we three walk along the road to the hospital. My host, the doctor, is a large, genial young man, looking especially large in the rotund bulkiness of his costume. Visiting the plague hospital is nothing to him. He has seen over six hundred patients die in it since he took charge and is to see many more.

There is the scientific spirit in him, little thought of personal danger in the work, only keen interest in the bacillus and its peculiar nature. All the precautionary measures, washing hands at every turn, innumerable changes of clothes, etc., new to the outsider, have become mechanical habits that hardly require thought from him. This unobscure about the danger on the part of the doctor and the happy the lungs, it is not the pneumonia but the poisoning in the blood which kills. The yellow in the face appears to be one evidence of the poison. Another is the purple color in the body in the septicaemic cases.

We have been standing for a minute of two just inside the door with these people for whom there is no escape from death. "Schneller" (quicker) calls the doctor and we pass out into the hallway.

The second ward is the same. There are the seven or eight wearied men lying in comparative comfort. Each lies on a separate iron bed. The room is well lighted with two large windows and it is warm and fairly well ventilated. The Russian Government is doing well by the plague patients.

The men look so ill that it would appear to matter little to them whether they may lie in a bed or out in the snow and ice. No remedy has been discovered so far to prevent death, and it remains only to make the last few hours of their lives as comfortable as possible. We close the door upon them, passing out, knowing that most of them will have died before the nightfall and will be taken away the next morning to the cremation grounds.

The doctor evidently feels the difficulty of breathing through his muffler, for he has just torn it off and stands in the doorway unmasked. Soon, back in the office room, the little nurse, too, has something more than her eyes to smile with. But I, less hardened to the place, stay muffled like the sanitars.

LIKE GETTING OUT OF MINE.

Getting out of the plague hospital is something like getting out of a mine through different compressed air compartments. First, we wash our hands, then swish our boots round in tubs of disinfectant. Next the outside coat comes off and is left behind in one room to be sterilized. Then sublimate solution is sprayed over the rest of us. The doctor, having been sprayed, continues to wear his white undercoat, but I take off my canvas suit in the outer room, wash my hands again, and leave in my ordinary clothes. There are two Russian sanitars and three Chinese always on duty in the hospital, and a total staff of twenty Russians and thirty Chinese doing this particular work. They do not stay in the sick rooms any longer than is necessary, but visit them frequently.

I have bade my host good bye and am off back to the city. On the way I find myself imagining how a germ or two may have slipped through a crevice in my gauze mask and started to work inside me. I have been told by others that similar alarms have come to them after they have been in contact with the disease. You discover yourself tapping your chest to see if there is any pain, or casting glances at the snow where you have spat to see if there is any reddish suggestion, though, of course, there would be no sign of the disease for several days after you had contracted it. Discovering nothing, you rejoice again that you have not confided your fears to anyone.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS

BRITISH CRIMINALS SHOULD BE GRATEFUL.

Warned When Arrested and Have Many Privileges When Awaiting Trial.

Although a prisoner when committed to a term of penal servitude does not, as a rule, consider himself very lucky or fortunate, yet he has, at any rate, the consolation of knowing that he has had an eminently fair trial and well deserves conviction, says Pearson's Weekly.

It can safely be said that in no other country in the world is the law so tender towards an accused man as is the law in Britain.

When a man is arrested by a police officer, it is only natural that he should, in the heat of the moment, make statements which might be against his own interests. He might very easily say something that would be most detrimental to him later on.

The law, however, does not wish to take him unawares, so the officer is instructed to warn the man against making any statement and that if he does make it, it may be used in evidence against him at the trial.

Again, when a man is taken to a police station, he may wish to confess to certain things in connection with the crime, but the police must not persuade him in this direction. What he does must be purely voluntary and with full knowledge of the use to which the confession will be put thereafter.

If, after due consideration, he still desires to make a confession, he is given some paper whereon he writes down in his own way and of his own free will, and in the presence of a police officer what he wishes to say.

One would think that when a person confesses to committing a crime there would be no need to call evidence about it. But the English law is not going to condemn a man because he confesses. Evidence must be given by outside witnesses, and that evidence is closely examined. If it corroborates the prisoner's confession then he may be convicted. If not, he may, notwithstanding his confession of guilt, be discharged.

For example. One often hears that in murder mysteries men come into court and confess they are guilty of the crime, yet when their statements are looked into, and examined by the light of other evidence, it is found that there is no truth in their "confession," and accordingly they are at once released.

When awaiting trial prisoners are allowed many privileges—they can do as they please within reason, have papers and books, a certain choice in regard to meals, and the fullest latitude to consult with friends and legal advisers on

MAKING NAVAL GUNS.

The Huge Weapons Are Made on the Wire-Wound Principle.

The introduction of the huge 13.5 inch gun into our Navy has caused a great deal of excitement in the navy yards of other nations. Of course this gigantic weapon will have to be equalled on all the foreign battleships that are now being built.

Britain's guns are made on what is termed the wire-wound principle, that is to say, over the barrel is wound a huge length of steel wire until the gun is built up to the required thickness.

The inner tube of the gun is placed on a lathe beside which is a reel on which the wire is wound. One end of the wire is wound round the gun, and then the lathe is set slowly in motion. The wire is thus slowly uncoiled from the reel to the gun, the reel travelling up and down the length of the gun as the wire is wound from the breech to the muzzle and back again. It takes several weeks to build up a gun in this way.

Heavy weights regulate the tension of the wire, so that it may be wound as tightly as possible, and a gun of the largest size may require over one hundred miles of wire.

England is almost the only nation to use the wire-wound gun, but the ordnance authorities consider that such weapons are far stronger than those built up of steel rings, and that a small flaw will not injure the gun to any great extent. Another advantage is that the inner tube can be replaced when the rifling is worn so that the life of the gun is prolonged.

Messrs. Armstrong made guns on this principle in 1876 and 1879, but the explosives of those days did not require such strength, and it was not until 1887 that Woolwich Arsenal turned out a 9.2 weapon on the wire principle. Since then all British guns of large type have been wire-wound.

TITLED WOMAN A PEDDLER.

Archduchess Isabella of Austria Sells Hungarian Lace.

For a titled woman to become a peddler from choice is rather unusual, but Paris is prepared for everything, and an Archduchess selling lace there created very little sensation, though she did a land office business for the few hours she was in trade.

Archduchess Isabella of Austria, wife of the Archduke Frederick, and mother of six girls and a boy who is heir to the greatest fortune in Austria, had tried in vain to dispose of the lace made by Hungarian peasants under her patronage, and, failing to sell as much as she wished through others, she decided to undertake the task herself. On her way back from Spain, where she had been visiting the Queen Mother, she stopped for a few days in Paris.

Driving in her motor car to one after another of the best shops for feminine finery, she sent her card to the head of the firm, like any commercial traveller. Then without waiting for consent to invade the premises with her goods she swept by astonished attendants and followed by two lackeys bearing baskets filled to the brim with lace, made her way to the most crowded part of the stores, seated herself before a counter and displayed the lace she wished to sell, explaining the bacillus and its peculiar nature. All the precautionary measures, washing hands at every turn, innumerable changes of clothes, etc., new to the outsider, have become mechanical habits that hardly require thought from him. This unconcern about the danger on the part of the doctor and the happy little nurse tripping along by our side is a surprise.

The plague hospital, a vast barrack, is enclosed by a board fence. The first thing we see on entering is a porcelain lined bath tub, where the attendants bathe after finishing their term of duty.

DISINFECTING ROOM.

The next room is the disinfecting room, where the clothes are sprayed and changed. Across the hall is an office. The hallway runs down the centre with about seven additional rooms opening on either side, wherein the sick are lying. Built in the walls along the hallway are big cylindrical Russian stoves which heat both the hall and the sick room on the other side of the wall. One of the Chinese attendants is stoking the fires, which are fed from the hall side, and the whole place is thoroughly warm and comfortable.

The doctor first led the way into the ward for Europeans. Most of these men who have died—49 in all in Harbin—died here, but the room was empty at the time of my visit.

The floors of the hospital are swimming in disinfectants, and now and then as we stand in the room we hear in the hallway the splash of the heavy feet of the sanitars or sanitary employees in large tubs of disinfectant, where they wash off their boots after coming out of the sick room.

The doctor opens the door of a room across the hall where there are seven Chinese victims and tells us to stay at the threshold. But the little nurse walks in and stands alongside one of the beds. The faces of these seven men are wofully wretched, drawn and horribly yellow and wearied.

ON NERVES.

Two raise their heads and look at us; the rest hardly move their eyes. One or two groan, but there is little sound from the others. The disease must be wearying, yet it works so quickly that there is hardly time for it to weaken the sick man utterly. There have been many cases in which the man got up and walked on the day of his death, and some even walked from their homes to the plague hospital.

Though little is known of the action of the bacillus, it is thought that the virulent toxin created by the bacillus during germination and quickly introduced into the system acts upon the nerve system affecting the heart. After the appearance of the first symptom it acts with striking suddenness, and it is supposed that the poison has hardly time to weaken the man to an extremity. As he approaches death a comatose state is brought on in which he becomes very weak, staggering as in drunkenness, and finally falling, if alone, unable to rise again.

The many victims who were found in the streets in the mornings during the height of the epidemic here had been overcome in this way. Also, in the last stages of the disease some cases become mentally affected and endeavor to wander about. Though there is some discomfort in

A "BEST WOMAN."

An Unusual Incident at a Wedding in India.

It has been suggested by some maker of jokes that the reason why the bride so often weeps at the wedding is that she never marries the best man. Reading about the wedding described in Dr. Winifred Heston's "A Bluestocking in India," one cannot but hope that there was a "sequel"—that after the bride had so signally demonstrated her unusual calibre and made way for a less spirited successor, the "best man" mentioned in the case saw his opportunity.

Yesterday I went to a native Christian wedding.

Many guests had assembled, and the ceremony had progressed to the point where Mr. Gray asked the bride:

"Do you take this man to love, cherish and obey?" when the young woman in the case responded with a surprising and unmistakable "No!"

Mr. Gray labored with her in an undertone, but to no avail. The marriage had, as usual, been arranged by the parents without consulting the daughter. But it is an almost an unknown thing for a girl to be so bold and disobedient. I predict a great future for her.

The situation was then explained to the assembled guests, and volunteers were asked to supply the vacancy. A young lady promptly came forward, and the ceremony proceeded as if nothing had happened.

Afterward the bridal pair left the altar by different aisles to hold a reception under a tree, where congratulations and rice were poured upon them. The groom placed a silver ring upon the great toe of the bride's left foot, and a "best man" tied the groom's neck-scarf to the bride's flowing garment, and thus they sat in state for some hours.

SCHOOLS TRY HOME RULE.

Commissioners Are Elected by Different Classes.

Several Berlin (Germany) Public Schools are making an experiment with a species of home rule. Once every half year each class elects by secret and direct ballot four of its number as commissioners. One commissioner is responsible for the maintenance of order, another, for the proper keeping of "study," a third for ascertaining the wishes of the class and the fourth for looking after the keys, wardrobe and other property of the pupils.

In cases of school misbehavior the commissioners' evidence may be heard. In general the commissioners are expected to infuse a good tone into the class and see that it does not waste its time. They have also charge of the library and prepare their charges for the monthly inspections. Moreover, the commissioner they select, not the teacher, acts as intermediary in bringing the wishes of the pupils to the notice of the school authorities.

The heads of the gymnasiums where the experiment is being made report that it is proving much more successful in the lower classes than in the higher, where the institution of commissioners is less popular.

When the sessions come on the accused is not taken straightaway for trial in open court. The English law is not yet satisfied that there is any cause why he should be tried in this way. His case, therefore, comes first of all before the grand jury, who want to know exactly the nature of the complaint against him, and exactly what evidence will be called in proof.

If they are not satisfied they throw out the indictment, and the prisoner is at once released. Assuming, however, there is a case to be tried the indictment goes forward before the "petty" jury in the public court.

A prisoner may be too poor to pay for a legal gentleman to defend him, and therefore if he applies to the judge, the latter will instruct a barrister to take up the case and use his best endeavors to persuade the jury to acquit the accused.

This barrister will pick out all the weak spots in the prosecutor's evidence and make the most of them, and, above all, he will not forget to solemnly impress upon the jury that it is better for ninety-nine guilty men to escape than for one innocent man to be convicted, and to their credit, be it said, English juries always act on this principle.

Supposing a prisoner is found guilty, he is not finished with yet. There may be a "point of law" in the case which his counsel is doubtful about. The latter thereupon appeals to the "Court of Criminal Appeal," which consists of several judges of the High Court. This Court will hear the arguments for and against.

THE "POINT OF LAW"

raised by the prisoner's counsel, and if the court decides in the prisoner's favor the jury's conviction may be quashed and be of no effect whatever.

One important point should also be mentioned in connection with trials at sessions or the Old Bailey. It may be that the prisoner is a villain of the deepest dye—he may have had many previous convictions against him—and which if the jury knew of them, they would feel very much inclined to convict him, notwithstanding that the evidence in the case under review was very weak. The law, however, decrees that no evidence can be given of these previous convictions until a verdict of guilty on the case being heard is returned. It is only when sentence is about to be pronounced that this evidence is given.

Then, of course, after conviction and sentence the prisoner has the right of appeal. He can appeal either against being convicted at all, or against the severity of the sentence. This appeal comes before three of his Majesty's most experienced judges, and it is only after everything that can be said for the prisoner has been said that these judges give their decision.

Also, when a man has been tried for an offence and been acquitted by the jury, he cannot be tried again for the same offence, unless, indeed, some very special additional evidence is afterwards secured against him.

Nothing ventured nothing gained—but you may be able to keep what you have.

out waiting for consent to invade the premises with her goods she swept by astonished attendants and followed by two lackeys bearing baskets filled to the brim with lace, made her way to the most crowded part of the stores, seated herself before a counter and displayed the lace she wished to sell, explaining its merits to the women gathered about her.

Of course, many women gave orders for lace, which the Archduchess recorded in a notebook bearing the Imperial insignia on its cover. In the background lingered proprietors and floorwalkers, who knew better than to disturb an Archduchess, no matter how troublesome her eccentricities. When the lady had done all the business she could she signalled the lackeys to remove the lace, and with gracious bows of thanks she went on her way to the next shop.

A DESTINED LEADER.

Two Travellers in Italy Got a Surprise.

Two Englishmen travelling in Italy appealed to a village innkeeper for a trustworthy guide who would conduct them over the pass between the mountains of Rondinajo and Tre Potenze. In "Walks and People in Tuscany," Sir Francis Vane tells of their surprise when an old woman appeared and announced that she had come to make arrangements for the journey. They concluded she must be the mother of their guide, and bargained with her accordingly.

What was our amazement to learn that this elderly dame was our destined leader, and, indeed, she was got up for the fray in long boots and short skirts with a workmanlike-looking stick.

On we tramped, she always ahead, walking with a fine military swing which a Life Guardsman might have envied. The path was difficult, and could not be used by vehicles. Our guide led us up the steep way which follows a small and rushing stream issuing from out the side of Rodinajo, and up it we ascended for an hour or more, until the pass was reached.

We here had the merciful intention of sending the old woman back, an intention, however, she very strongly opposed. It was only by allowing her to come some few miles farther on, that we could induce her to leave us until she had seen us safely to the end of the journey.

SIX MONTHS TO COOL.

The largest steam hammer in the world has been made at Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. It is used for forging steel plates of enormous thickness and size, is ten feet square and strikes a blow of 20 tons. The anvil block upon which its fearful impact descends is a solid cube of twelve feet, and weighs 180 tons. It was cast upon the foundation it now rests on, and it took the molten contents of six cupolas to make the block. When it was cast the Pittsburgh fire department sent six fire-engines to the scene, and kept them there for a week, or until all danger that the fearful mass of molten iron might burst its bonds, or by its exploding gases fire the neighborhood, had ended. It took nearly six months for the anvil to cool, so that the sand mould might be dug away, and even then workmen could not touch it with their hands.

ANALYSTS DETECT MURDER

CAREFUL TESTS AND EXAMINATIONS ARE MADE.

Some Poisons Stain the Roof of the Mouth and Are Easily Discovered.

Time and again, when a man is on trial for his life, there appears as one of the witnesses for the prosecution the Home Office expert, the man who often throws the greatest possible light upon the cause of the tragedy, says Pearson's Weekly.

When there is doubt about any one's death, the post-mortem examination is the first step in solving the problem. The body is thoroughly searched for any external signs, as scratches, bruises, and cuts, that would be likely to cause death. If this inspection fails, and the body is otherwise healthy, poison is naturally suspected. The stomach and certain other parts are then placed in glass jars, sealed, and sent to the analyst.

Some poisons are easily detected. Oil of vitriol, for instance, burns the mouth and throat, leaving black stains. But the effects of poisons are often very

LIKE THOSE OF DISEASES, and a most careful examination has to be made.

The analyst begins his examination by making a series of "brews," boiling, filtering, and distilling the matter he is investigating. He uses, during this time various "agents," as they are called, which separate the different classes of poisons. This work often takes days of constant labor to perform, the time varying according to the kind of poison, prussic acid, for instance, being much easier to detect than strychnine.

If his various tests fail, what is left of the animal matter is mixed with hydrochloric acid and distilled again, after which he knows that the body contains no poison save a metallic one. In this inquiry the expert has made a number of decoctions, each of which is tested in turn.

Suppose he is testing one. A little of the "brew" is placed in a small glass test-tube with some distilled water. Hydrochloric acid is carefully dropped in. If silver, mercury, or lead is present, a powder is formed. If nothing happens, the analyst tests again with other agents for certain groups of metals. At last he notices a change, and knows that the poison he is after belongs to one of three or four. As an instance, his search shows that the poison is either arsenic, tin, or cadmium. He boils the "brew" again, and adds some strong ammonia, and finds the powder in the liquid has disappeared. He is

NOW CERTAIN OF ARSENIC!

But the life of a fellow-being is hanging on his results, and he must be sure beyond all doubt. A famous special test for the arsenic is known as Reinsch's, and this he tries. A little of the suspected liquid is placed in the test-tube with some hydrochloric acid. A small piece of copper is dropped in and the liquid warmed. Arsenic and copper are madly in love with each other, and every scrap of the JAPANESE TIDBITS.

Filet of Raw Fish, Whales, Sea Sprigs and Rice Locusts.

One of the great food delicacies of Japan is sashimi, a filet of raw fish served with soy and condiments. This dish, though highly recommended by both Japanese and European medical authorities, is pronounced queer or uncivilized by those not born to the custom of eating it.

When these critics are reminded, however, of their eating live oysters with gusto it occurs to them, says the Oriental Review, that the one is at least more artistic in appearance than the other, though both may be equally palatable and nutritious.

It is likely that very few English people know that the fisher folk along the Devonshire coast are accustomed to eat laver, an edible seaweed, and so think it very odd that the Japanese should use certain seaweeds as an article of diet.

Ferns, burdock roots, lily bulbs, lotus roots and bamboo sprouts are among the Japanese vegetables not enjoyed by Occidental peoples, while the chrysalis of the silk worm, rice locusts, the octopus whales and sea slugs eaten in some parts of China and Japan are sure to shock their fine sensibilities.

And yet the most civilized epicures relish snails and frogs' legs, which are just as odd in their way as those varieties of animal food mentioned above. Shark's fin soup, edible birds' nest and lime cured eggs are far famed Chinese luxuries, the last item of which is equal to the strongest animated cheese in its power over the olfactory nerves.

NOVEL ENGLISH PANCAKES

VARIETIES NOT WELL KNOWN IN THIS COUNTRY.

Recipes for Apple, Cream, Dublin, Almond, Savory, Chicken, and Potato Pancakes.

An astonishing variety of novel pancakes is described by an English housekeeper who gives some of the recipes in the Queen. She says that it is most important that all eggs should be fresh, well beaten, and in some instances the whites and yolks should be beaten separately. The pan must be perfectly clean and should be warmed before putting in the fat for frying. Butter or sweet lard may be used for frying. Among the unusual recipes she gives are the following:

Apple Pancakes—Make a rich batter as for Dublin pancakes. Have ready one-half pound of apple sauce. Take two omelet pans with butter in each; pour into each pan the same quantity of batter. When one side of each is cooked spread upon one enough sauce to cover it, then take the second pancake and place it down side up upon the apple sauce. Do this until the whole of the batter is used. Dish and send each pancake to table as it leaves the pan dusted with caster sugar.

Cream Pancakes—Six eggs, one pint of cream, four ounces of sugar, a glass of white wine, half a grated nutmeg. The eggs must be well beaten and sieved and the whole made into a stiff, smooth batter with cornflour and ordinary flour to the consistency of pancake batter. Spread a little butter over a hot pan and pour into it enough batter to make a thin pancake; turn with care. These may be spread with any preserve or served with any juice or wine sauce.

Dublin Pancake—Six eggs, one pint of cream (or milk may be used, allowing an extra ounce of butter), a grated nutmeg, two ounces of butter, a glass of white wine, one-half pound of dry flour. Whip the yolks and whites of the eggs separately. Pour the wine, nutmeg and butter just warm into the flour and stir well. Put in the yolks of the eggs, well beaten. Lastly add the cream carefully, with the whites of the eggs beaten to a snow. When of a smooth batter it is ready to use. Should the batter not be thick enough add a little more flour. Serve with warm jelly or half lemons and sugar.

Almond Pancake—Make a batter as above. The almonds must be blanched in sherry or brandy for twelve hours before putting in a mortar. Remove the skins from the almonds and put the kernels into the mortar with a tablespoonful of orange or rose flower water to prevent them oiling. When well pounded add them to the batter. Drop the mixture from a spoon; cook and turn. Dish and dust with caster sugar, pass a redhot salamander over each for one minute.

Savory Pancakes—Oyster Pancakes—Have ready a dozen bearded oysters, heat them in their own liquor, together with a gill of stock. When blanched and plump put them aside upon a dish and make a rich

FIERCEST CONFLAGRATIONS

THE MONEY COST OF DEVASTATING FIEND.

Modern Appliances for Fire-Fighting do Not Reduce the Loss by Fire.

A man who could pocket one day's loss by fire would be not merely rich, he would be extremely wealthy. His capital would be just under $1,250,000, yielding the comfortable income of, say, $40,000 a year, says London Answers.

London has had many terrible fires. The worst, since "the Great Fire of London," in 1666, was the famous Tooley Street fire, which broke out on the evening of Saturday, June 22nd, 1861. It started on Colton's Wharf, near London Bridge, in some huge warehouses, six storeys high, and covering three acres. Thousands of chests of tea and coffee, bales of beautiful silks, and tons of Russian tallow, tar, and oil, were stored there.

With such a mass of inflammable material, it was out of the question to extinguish the flames. All that could be done was to endeavor to confine them to a certain area. Presently, thousands of rats came trooping out, and started swimming across the river to the far side. London Bridge was black with spectators. The crowd was so great that several people were pushed over the parapets and drowned. Burning tar and oil poured in cascades over the edge of the wharf, and floated down river in streams of fire. Then came the most terrible part of the catastrophe. As Mr. James Braidwood, director of the London Fire Brigade, was busy encouraging his men, the front wall of the great warehouse tottered, bulged outwards, and fell with an appalling crash, burying the chief under tons of smoking ruins.

A $10,000,000 LOSS.

This fire burnt for four days and four nights, and the lowest estimate of the damage done was $10,000,000.

Next in magnitude among London fires was the Wood street outbreak of December 8th, 1882. One hundred and fifty men and twenty-six steamers could do little to check it, and before it was got under more than two million square feet of surface were left a barren, fire-blackened waste. The loss was calculated at nearly $10,000,000.

Even more costly was the City fire of November, 1898. This began in Wall Street, Cripplegate, and spread to parts of no fewer than seventeen streets. Two and a half acres were absolutely burnt out, and the loss was about $10,000,000, only half of which was covered by insurance. Although, happily, no lives were lost, 4,000 people were thrown out of employment. This great fire is believed to have been due to deliberate arson.

Dundee boasts the biggest fire which has devastated any British city outside London in recent years. On July 20th, 1906, fire broke out in the enormous bonded spirit stores of Messrs. James Watson & Co. All Thursday night the firemen fought desperately against the fierce flames, but in vain. The fire and liquid is placed in the test-tube and with some hydrochloric acid. A small piece of copper is dropped in, and the liquid warmed. Arsenic and copper are madly in love with each other, and every scrap of the poison in the tube flies to the copper and covers it with a grey coat.

The copper is taken out, washed, dried, and placed in a glass tube, and the whole heated. The grey deposit disappears, and the arsenic is found clinging in crystals to the glass. This test is final, and has brought more than one murderer to the scaffold.

It is easy to see that an analyst's task is not an easy one. Not only must he try and find the actual poison, but often it is necessary to discover the actual quantity used. An instance of this may be recalled.

The wife of a surgeon died from corrosive sublimate poisoning. The surgeon administered the suspected draught, and he asserted that he mistook the bottle of mixture—prepared for a sailor—for the water bottle.

The sailor's mixture was analysed and found to contain corrosive sublimate. The analyst measured the quantities present, and discovered that the mixture contained only ten grains to an ounce of liquid, while the draught contained fifteen grains of poison to the same quantity, showing that

THE SURGEON HAD LIED!

A suit of dirty clothes with a few small, rusty-looking spots. Are they blood? The piece of cloth is cut and put in a small quantity of distilled water. With the aid of the spectroscope the expert ascertains that it is blood and not paint or iron mould.

The spectroscope merely tells him that it is blood, but not the kind. Here the microscope comes in and leads the investigator a step further. It is, however, never safe to say whether the blood is human or not; all that can be said with certainty is that it is the blood of a mammal.

LEGEND OF THE PHOENIX.

According to Ancient Writers It Was a Beautiful Bird.

According to ancient writers, the phoenix was a bird of great beauty about the size of an eagle. Only one of these birds could live at a time, but its existence covered a period of five hundred or six hundred years. When its life drew to a close the bird built for itself a funeral pyre of wood and aromatic spices, with its wings fanned the pyre into a flame, and therein consumed itself. From its ashes a worm was produced, out of which another phoenix was formed, having all the vigor of youth. The first care of the new phoenix was to solemnize its parent's obsequies. For that purpose it made a ball of myrrh, frankincense and other fragrant things. At Heliopolis, a city in lower Egypt, there was a magnificent temple dedicated to the sun. To this temple the phoenix would carry the fragrant ball and burn it on the altar of the sun as a sacrifice. The priests then examined the register and found that exactly five hundred years, or exactly six hundred years, had elapsed since that same ceremony had taken place.—London Globe.

God exists. We cannot doubt, and we cannot prove it. God lives in our conscience, in the conscience of humanity in the universe which surrounds us. The conscience feels Him in its most solemn moments of sorrow and of joy; the universe manifests Him in the order, harmony, and intelligence of its notions. The first atheist was, without any doubt, a man who was concealing some crime from men, and sought by denying God to free himself from the sole witness he could not escape, and so to still his self-torment.—Mazzini.

ADVANTAGES OF THE CITY.

But the Country Has Its Flowers and Meadows.

The education that comes of living in a great city is the subject of discussion by a German writer. He observes that the city child is treated with far more strictness than the child of the village. The city child must begin to exercise care from the moment he is allowed to go into the street. He is taught to be on his guard against strangers and not to wear his heart on his sleeve in the case of a new acquaintance.

He has to work hard both in school and later in the workshop, and he must do without the fresh air, the flowers and trees, the rivulets and meadows of the country. On the other hand living in a great city gives him knowledge of the world, of art and human nature, besides offering him pleasures that rarely or never come within the reach of the country dweller.

One faculty in particular is developed in the city inhabitant, the sentiment of community in important public questions. Only in the great city is the full force of public opinion felt and revolutions become possible. The great city is a fine developer of the intelligence.

BOHEMIAN SPAS.

Over $40,000,000 Spent There Each Year by Foreign Visitors.

According to the latest statistics about $40,045,000 is expended each year by visitors from foreign countries who take the "cure" at the natural mineral spring resorts in Western Bohemia along the Erzgebirge (Ore Mountains). This does not include the sum spent by foreign transient visitors who stop for less than eight days, or by those from the various crown lands. The grand total is not less than $45,000,000 to $50,000,000.

Some idea of the volume of business transacted at the great Bohemian spas may be deduced from the fact that the railroad office in Marienbad, which has a resident population of 6,279, receives from outbound passengers for transportation tickets alone, exclusive of baggage receipts, $406,000 annually. The post office in the same city turns over to the government, after payment of all expenses, a net profit of a like amount. These figures can be multiplied by three for Carlsbad. The three resorts depending on their natural mineral springs for cures purposes (Carlsbad, Marienbad and Franzensbad), pay $913,500 annually in direct taxes, exclusive of the special assessments.

Savory Pancakes—Oyster Pancakes—Have ready a dozen bearded oysters, heat them in their own liquor, together with a gill of stock. When blanched and plump put them aside upon a dish and make a rich batter seasoned with pepper, salt and minced parsley. Take each oyster, dip it into the batter on a skewer and put it into the boiling fat. Take up and drain upon kitchen paper. Dish the pancakes and garnish with tufts of watercress. Serve with half lemons and cayenne.

Chicken Pancakes—Remove all the skin and bone from the breast of a cold roast chicken and mince it very finely. Put it into a stewpan with one ounce of butter. When thoroughly heated put the pan on one side. As soon as the chicken is cold stir in a gill of cream. Season with pepper and salt, then add one teaspoonful of Lemco. When thoroughly dissolved make a good batter, pour the batter into a well greased pan. When one side is done lay upon it a tablespoonful of the mince and cover lightly with more batter. Dish and set in a hot oven or before a good fire, so that the batter will rise high. It will then be ready for table. Serve with half lemons and cayenne. These should be taken to table as they leave the oven.

Spanish Pancakes—Cut a French roll into finger lengths and soak them in heated butter, then fry lightly in butter, after which leave till cold. Beat with minced parsley, season with ground cinnamon, pepper and salt. Dip each into thick batter and fry quickly. Place a blanched and curled anchovy on each slice and serve garnished with chervil.

Potato Pancake—Boil three potatoes, and mash them well with a lump of butter, some milk and three beaten eggs. Mix all together, season with pepper, salt and a grate of nutmeg. Again beat for ten minutes. Put a good quantity of lard in a pan and drop the mixture from a spoon into the boiling fat. Do not turn them, but hold over each a red hot salamander. Dust with grated ham or grated yolks of hard-boiled eggs.

Mushroom Pancakes—Have ready some mushrooms skinned and stalked. Cook them nicely in butter. When blanched, pour into the pan, well greased, enough batter to make a thin pancake. When one side is done spread the top with the mushroom mixture, well seasoned. Have ready a pancake cooked upon one side. Place it brown side up over the mushrooms. Set in the oven for three minutes. Send to table at once.

Cheese Pancakes—Make a thin batter with cream and yolks of eggs well beaten; season with pepper and salt and a minced shallot. Stir all together, then throw in enough cheese to make it of a thin consistency. Fill a forcing pipe with the mixture and force it through into a pan of boiling fat. When cooked serve dusted with finely minced parsley. Do not turn these. Set in the oven one minute before dishing. Sprinkle Parmesan cheese over them.

One kind of a hypocrite is a man who pretends to be busy when he isn't.

On July 20th, 1908, fire broke out in the enormous bonded spirit stores of Messrs. James Watson & Co. All Thursday night the firemen fought desperately against the fierce flames; but in vain. The fire worked its way down to the ground floor, and reached a great blending-vat, containing 7,000 gallons of whisky. The blaze which followed resembled a volcanic eruption. The sewers were filled with bubbling, boiling spirits, and the fumes overpowered firemen and bystanders.

The flames spread in all directions and were not subdued till an area of five acres had been burnt out, and $2,500,000 worth of damage done.

TEN THOUSAND HOMELESS.

The present century, young as it is, has seen several record fires, including one which throws into the shade all other conflagrations. We refer, of course, to the burning of San Francisco, after the earthquake of April, 1906. When one considers that an area nearly four miles long of thickly populated buildings was laid in ashes, and the money loss was over $250,000,000, it seems a perfect miracle that the loss of life was only about 300.

San Francisco is not the only town that has been wiped out by fire during these first years of the twentieth century. In January, 1904, the town of Aalesund, in Norway, was simply swept off the earth by a terrific conflagration. Aalesund was the headquarters of the Norwegian cod fishery and had over 12,000 inhabitants. The fire started on a Friday night, in the western end of the town. As ill-luck would have it, a furious gale was blowing from the sea, and showers of sparks fired the wooden roofs in dozens of different directions. All efforts to stay the flames were fruitless, and by morning there was nothing left except — by a curious freak of chance — the Custom House offices, and 12,000 people were camping out in 30 deg. of frost.

In April, 1908, Chelsea, a populous suburb of Boston, met with a similar disaster. Some ragpickers kindled a fire on a piece of waste ground. A strong wind carried the blazing refuse against some out-buildings, and, presently, a tornado of fire was sweeping through the doomed town.

Ten thousand persons were left homeless, eighty-seven were burnt to death, and the loss was far over $10,000,000.

TUFT OF PERIWAK FEATHER.

On the apex of the crown worn by the Prince of Wales on special occasions is a curious feather, or rather tuft of feathers, the top of which is adorned with a gold thread. The value of this feather is estimated at $50,000, and it has the distinction of being the only one of its kind in human possession. Twenty years passed after the first hunter set out to procure the feather before it was attained, and during that period more than a dozen hunters had lost their lives in the quest. The costly tuft is of periwak feathers, and the extraordinary danger incurred in procuring it was due to the fact that the periwak, for some unknown reason, is to be found only in dense jungles in which tigers make their lair.

SUE KAISER FOR $20,000,000

Descendants of Count Munnich Lay Claim to Vast Estate

A despatch from Berlin says: Kaiser Wilhelm will shortly be the defendant in a suit in which $20,000,000 is at stake. The plaintiffs are two direct heirs of the Russian soldier-statesman, Field Marshal Count Burkhard Christoph von Munnich, upon whom Frederick the Great conferred vast estates of Bugen in return for his services in securing the Russian alliance for Prussia.

Count Munnich fell into disgrace upon the accession of the Empress Elizabeth of Prussia and was sentenced to be executed. He was actually sent to Siberia for 20 years, and was completely stripped of his estates by Elizabeth. Peter III., recalled him and he again enjoyed great power at the Russian court. On his death in 1767 Frederick the Great transferred the Bugen properties to Munnich's son, Ernst. In consequence of litigation Ernst Munnich never obtained possession of the estates, and they lapsed to the Prussian Crown.

The descendants of Munnich say now that they have the royal deed of gift and are able to prove their lineage. They intend to sue in the Prussian courts.

BRITISH EXODUS.

Returned Visitor Says Farms are Being Depleted.

A despatch from Montreal says: Mr. C. R. Hosmer returned to Montreal on Friday from England and Continental Europe. In the British Isles, he said, he found that Canada as a field for the man who was willing to work was a topic of conversation among all classes. He stated that there seemed good ground for the apprehension felt by some people in England, and many in Scotland, at the exodus of the young men and farmers to the Canadian West. The emigration this year is heavier than ever, said he, and in parts of Scotland there are not enough men left to work the farms, while almost all the young men are on their way to Canada. The emigrants are of the best class, he declared. He stated also that British investors have great faith in Canada, and that the many financiers whom he met had little hesitation in taking up Canadian securities.

DIAZ LEAVES MEXICO.

Dictator for Thirty Years, He Leaves Secretly.

A despatch from Mexico City, says: Porfirio Diaz, for whom during 30 years all Mexico stood to one side, early on Friday, hat in hand, stole from the capital. Only a few devoted friends, whom he dared to trust, followed him to the station, and at 2 o'clock in the morning, shortly after the celebration in Dreamland itself, and more than $1,000,000 worth of property to the east and west of the big park. In the ruins were the charred bodies of about eighty animals, lions, bears, monkeys, deer, leopards and various hybrids, which had been part of Col. Terrani's animal show.

LOCOMOTIVE WORKS SOLD.

The Big Plant at Kingston Changes Hands.

A despatch from Kingston, Ont., says: The Canadian Locomotive Company, Ltd., of Kingston, has sold out to an English syndicate, composed chiefly, it is understood, of Lord Glenconner, Darborough, Pryor, J. Leigh Wood, and F. R. S. Balfour, who recently visited Kingston to inspect the local works. The deal was put through on Friday afternoon at a special meeting of the stockholders, but the full details have not yet been announced. The price even is not given, but it was large. At present the capital stock of the company is $500,000. This will be increased full eightfold.

CHILD DEATH RATE.

Mortality in Montreal Increasing With Hot Weather.

A despatch from Montreal says: With the advent of midsummer weather the deaths from infantile debility and enteritis are on the increase in the city. Last week there were sixty-five children under five years who succumbed, twenty-eight dying before reaching six months, and seventeen dying between six months and one year. Between one and two years there were ten victims, and from two to five years, ten deaths.

MANY BUILDINGS WRECKED.

Windstorm Works Havoc in Vicinity of Carleton Place.

A despatch from Ottawa says: A heavy windstorm on Sunday night wrought havoc in the vicinity of Carleton Place. Many buildings were destroyed and trees uprooted. Three people driving in a buggy had a narrow escape. The wind overturned horse and rig on the road. Immediately in front of the vehicle a large tree was torn from its roots and fell across the roadway.

GOLD FROM THE YUKON.

$80,000 Received at Ottawa Mint and More Expected.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Gold from the Yukon to the value of $80,000 arrived at the Mint on Monday for conversion into coin of the realm. Further shipments are expected as the Spring clean-up goes through the Vancouver assay plant.

QUEEN WORE APRICOT SATIN.

King George's Third Court as Brilliant as the Others.

A despatch from London says: King George's third Court, held on Wednesday night, was similar in brilliance to those that had preceded it. The King appeared in the uniform of an admiral of the British Navy, while the Queen wore a gown of apricot satin, with a white satin train embroidered with gold. The Baroness Greville, who is a sister of the late Cecil Grace, the aviator killed recently, appeared in a mourning jetted gown with a train of oxidized silver. She wore a diamond tiara.

SPRINGHILL MINES STRIKE.

Basis for a Settlement Has Been Arrived at.

A despatch from Halifax, N. S., says: No official announcement has been made, but it is pretty well known that the basis for a settlement of the Springhill coal miners' strike has been reached. It is understood to be a compromise, but the result is not materially different from that of the award of the Board of Conciliation presided over by Judge Longley more than two years ago. The strike has now continued for twenty-two months.

HANGING AT MONTREAL.

Creola Collapsed and Had to be Carried to Scaffold.

A despatch from Montreal says: Francesco Creola, twenty years side, early on Friday, that in hand, stole from the capital. Only a few devoted friends, whom he dared to trust, followed him to the station, and at 2 o'clock in the morning, shortly after the celebration over his resignation had quieted down, Diaz was bound for Vera Cruz to take ship for Spain. In the distance he could hear the voices of a few of the more enthusiastic citizens who were still accompanying the new President, Frances Leon de la Barra and shouting "Viva Madero." So carefully were the arrangements made for the abdicated President's secret escape that the news did not transpire until late in the day. Secrecy was due less to apprehension of a popular outbreak than to a desire to reach Vera Cruz before marauders along the route could learn of the trip.

HONOR LONG TRAIL HEROES.

Government May Erect a Monument to Their Memory.

A despatch from Ottawa says: It was learned on Wednesday that the Government has under consideration the erection of a suitable memorial to Inspector Fitzgerald and the other members of the Royal North-West Mounted Police who recently perished on the patrol from Fort Macpherson to Dawson. A movement is already under way at Edmonton to erect a monument to the dead heroes in that city. The Government may be asked to contribute to this memorial, but it is generally believed among the officials here that if any vote is asked for from Parliament it will be for the construction of a memorial by the Dominion Government, probably at the Mounted Police Barracks at Regina.

"DREAMLAND'S" COSTLY FIRE

Eighty Wild Animals Perished in the Flames.

A despatch from New York says: A flat black plain of about ten acres of steaming embers and twisted iron, stretching from Fifth street westward to Tenth street, and from Surf avenue south to the river, laid out before the eyes of the onlookers when the sun rose on Saturday. The land on Saturday morning was the ruins of the fire. It started at 2 o'clock a.m. at the Dreamland company's building at 11th street, and spread rapidly, and at 8:25 a.m. it was a mass of flames and equipment.

A RECORD-BREAKING CROP

Mr. William Whyte Estimates the Western Yield at 200,000,000 Bushels

A despatch from Toronto says: According to Mr. William Whyte, Vice-President of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Winnipeg, who arrived in the city on Wednesday, given favorable weather conditions and estimating the yield at twenty bushels to the acre, this season's crop in the three Prairie Provinces will approximate two hundred millions of bushels of grain. Mr. Whyte said that the increase in the carmen of the Canadian Northern Railway, at a meeting on Thursday night, accepted the new schedule affecting their membership from Port Arthur to Edmonton and on all the branches, in all over 600 men. By it there is an increase in pay of two cents per hour. The new schedule is from 21 1/2 to 27. This is retroactive to May, 1911. On May 1, 1912, another increase of one cent per hour will be given. Improved working conditions have been established since May 1.

50 YEARS ON GRAND TRUNK.

Oldest Engineer in Service of Company is Dead in Montreal.

A despatch from Montreal says: Mr. Michael Fennell, the oldest engineer on the Grand Trunk Railway System, passed away on Thursday night at his home in Point St. Charles at the age of 79. He was an engineer before the Grand Trunk was built, and for over fifty years has been employed by that company. Mr. Fennell had driven engines on twelve sections of the system and had never had an accident. He was known as far west as Sarnia, Stratford and Fort Erie, and as far east as Island Pond, Rouses Point and Messina Springs. He had the honor of driving the engine which first brought King Edward, then Prince of Wales, into Montreal.

3-YEAR-OLD GIRL BURNED.

Destruction of Dwellings Near Fort Coulonge, Que.

A despatch from Ottawa says: In a fire near Fort Coulonge, Que., on Wednesday, which destroyed the house occupied by two families named Ladouceur and Kingbury, a daughter of the former, aged three years, perished. The fire had made good headway when it was discovered, and all the inmates of the building save two small children, a boy and girl, made their escape. The boy was rescued by one of the men of the house, but it was impossible to reach the other child. His charred remains were found in the ruins after the fire, which was caused by lightning.

to $5 each, and the lambs at $3 to $4 each. Prices of calves ruled steady at from $2 to $6 each, as to size and quality. Toronto, May 30.—Two choice export steers, weighing 1,500 lbs. each, were sold for $6.12 1/2, and quite a few heavy cattle for both butcher and export purposes were sold at prices ranging from $5.85 to $6.10, one load fetching the latter price. Stockers and feeders, especially the former, were unusually dear. Bulls were firmer, and cows were a little off. Sheep and lambs were unchanged, but hogs were reported strong and ten cents higher. $6 f.o.b., and $6.30 fed and watered, was quoted.

CANADA TO AFRICA.

Marconi Station at Glace Bay is Now Actively Employed.

A despatch from Halifax, N. S., says: Communication has been established between Cape Breton and Africa, and a message sent from the Glace Bay Marconi station direct to the Eiffel Tower, Paris, has been relayed within one hour to Dakar, on the coast of western Africa. A large staff of operators are on duty handling press and commercial business sent for the old country and that transmitted from the mother country.

HUDSON BAY RAILWAY.

First 155 Miles Will be Under Construction This Summer.

A despatch from Ottawa says: The first 155 miles of the Hudson Bay Railway, Canada's new route connecting the prairie Provinces with the European markets, will be under construction this summer. The Department of Railways is now calling for tenders for this first half of the line, starting from the present terminus of the Canadian Northern line at The Pas, on the west side of the Saskatchewan River. Tenders for the balance of the line will be called for just as soon as the route is finally located.

HANGED HIMSELF IN JAIL.

Insane Man Committed Suicide in Cell.

A despatch from Sudbury says: On Saturday afternoon Albert Anderson, who was brought down to Sudbury from Chappleau, violently insane and confined in the jail, committed suicide in his cell by hanging. He burst the straps with which his wrists were confined, fastened them together, and hung himself to the bars of his cell.

SWEPT BY AVALANCHE.

Russian Village Swept Away and 125 Persons Killed.

A despatch from St. Petersburg says: Word has reached here that the Village of Oroschor, situated on Pamir Plateau, in West Central Asia, has been overwhelmed by an avalanche. One hundred and twenty-eight persons were killed.

IMMIGRANT FELL DEAD.

Woman Expired at Quebec on Way to Friends in Toronto.

A despatch from Quebec says: Mrs. Sarah Turner, a third-class passenger on the steamer Royal George, dropped dead in the immigration sheds just after disembarking from the vessel on Wednesday afternoon at five o'clock. She was going to meet a family named Matthews in Toronto. Heart disease is supposed to have been the cause of death.

Creola Collapsed and Had to be Carried to Scaffold.

A despatch from Montreal says: Francesco Creola, twenty years old, paid the penalty at 8 o'clock on Friday morning at the Montreal jail for the murder of Giuseppe Chine. He was the first Italian to be hanged in this Province. Creola, or Giuseppe Crenora, his real name, as the hour of death approached became hysterical, and at the last had to be carried up the scaffold and supported while the rope was adjusted and the last rites of the Church carried out. He utterly collapsed.

BRITISH MANSION BURNED.

Only Walls of Sledmere Hall Standing—Paintings Saved.

A despatch from London says: Only the bare walls of Sledmere Hall, the residence of Sir Tatton Sykes, were left standing after Wednesday's fire. Romney oil paintings of the late Sir Christopher Sykes' collection, each valued at $100,000, were cut from their frames and removed from the burning mansion.

KING GEORGE'S KINDNESS.

Dismounted to Enquire Condition of Lady Thrown From Horse.

A despatch from London says: While Miss Florie Duveen, daughter of the late Sir Jos. Duveen, was riding in Hyde Park on Wednesday her horse bolted, and the young lady was thrown to the ground. She sustained a serious fracture of the skull. King George, who was passing on horseback at the time, dismounted and enquired very solicitously as to Miss Duveen's condition.

THE BIGGEST BATTLESHIP.

U. S. Warship Delaware Surpasses Britain's Crack Dreadnought.

A despatch from London says: British pride received a jar in the House of Commons on Wednesday afternoon when the Right Hon. Reginald McKenna, First Lord of the Admiralty, admitted, in reply to a question, that the United States battleship Delaware will be the largest ship at the Coronation naval review, surpassing Great Britain's show ship, the Neptune.

IS 101 YEARS OLD.

Grimsby's Oldest Inhabitant Taken to Refuge in an Auto.

A despatch from St. Catharines, says: Grimsby's oldest inhabitant, John Winney, a man 101 years of age, has been brought to the Industrial Home here. Mr. Winney is in good health, and walks around like a man of 60. His memory and eyesight are good, but he is a little hard of hearing. He has a son 75 years of age, and two grandsons both over 50. He was born in England in 1810. He was brought here in an automobile, and this was his first experience with what he called a "mud-splasher."

It is reported that the trainmen's convention at Harrisburg, Pa., decided to pay Grand Trunk men who failed of reinstatement after the strike forty dollars a month until they secure employment.

Incorporation of Vickers' Canadian Shipbuilding Company.

A despatch from London says: Vickers, shipbuilders, have applied to incorporate their Canadian company at a million sterling. When finally completed they expect a Canadian Government subsidy for the Montreal Naval establishment. The floating dock has begun at Barrow. The Montreal works are expected to reach completion in 1912.

784 WERE DEPORTED.

Number of Immigrants Rejected During Year Was 17,614.

A despatch from Ottawa says: During the last fiscal year 784 immigrants were deported from Canada because of physical unfitness, criminality or other causes, while 17,614 were rejected at ports of entry. Of the deportations 340 were English, 169 Americans, 90 Scotch, 23 Irish and 13 Italians. Of those rejected at ports of entry 15,404 were citizens of the United States and 2,210 were rejected at ocean ports.

A despatch from Berlin says: It was announced on Friday that Emperor William while at Buckingham Palace on May 16 had appointed King George a general field marshal in the Prussian Army.

MUST NOT FLY OVER LONDON.

Aviators Barred in Coronation Week For Fear of Accidents.

A despatch from London says: Notice was given in the House of Commons on Wednesday that a bill would be introduced forbidding aviators from flying over London during Coronation week. The Royal Aero Club has already given notice that any member of aero clubs who flies over the city during this period will be immediately suspended. This action was taken because of the danger of one of the machines falling on a crowd of people in some of the great public squares or rendezvous.

LINER CRASHES ON ROCK

Ivernia Lies in Queenstown Harbor in Badly Damaged Condition

A despatch from Queenstown says: The Cunard Line steamer Ivernia struck on a rock at noon on Wednesday during a fog as she was passing this port. The vessel is now resting at anchor close to the eastern bank of Kinloch Channel, in the inner harbor, with 25 feet of water in her fore compartment. No one on board the steamer was hurt.

The first that was known of the accident was when the liner passed Roche's Point, at the head of Cork harbor. The forepart of the Ivernia was sunk deep in the water, her stern was high in the air, and she had a dangerous-looking list to starboard. The great hole in the forepart of the liner and the narrow margin of free board above the water sufficiently indicated what a narrow escape the Cunarder had from disaster. The watertight compartment, however, stood the strain well, and the water was confined to the forward hold.

The captain brought his damaged vessel safely into the inner harbor, where she was anchored at the edge of the eastern bank. The passengers, who numbered 758, were quickly landed.

The liner was within a mile of a tender, which was waiting to take off the Irish contingent of passengers, when Daunt Rock suddenly loomed up in a dense fog, and before the vessel's way could be stopped the big ship struck. The passengers were at luncheon at the time of the accident, and quickly rushed on deck. The ship only hung on the rocks for a short time, and then slid off into deep water with a large aperture in her starboard bows, through which the water poured and threatened to flood the liner. Captain Potter and his officers, however, were prompt to close the bulkhead, and the inrush of water was confined to the forward hold. The Ivernia's officers were able to quickly reassure the passengers of their safety, and there was no sign of panic on board.

CLOSE ESCAPE FROM DEATH

THRILLING ADVENTURE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

An Englishman Lay Under His Horse Insensible From 6 p.m. to Midnight.

A bright crisp morning at the end of March, 1900, found me standing at the door of my log cabin gazing down the valley of Hat Creek, in British Columbia, some 6,000 miles away from England, writes S. W. Blyth in London Tit-Bits. Suddenly my attention was attracted by a band of wild horses, which I saw outside my fence, about half a mile away, near a meadow in which my horses were grazing. As I looked, the lord and master of the band, a fine black stallion, leapt the fence. I ran down the hill to the meadow, but too late: the horse had turned back.

was impossible to pull up; so, hunching up his back, my horse prepared for the leap. He made a tremendous bound in the air. Then came a crash, a thousand lights danced before my eyes, and all was blank. Some hours later I opened my eyes to see a bright moon shining overhead. I lay some time in a sort of dream, until at length consciousness returned to me and I attempted to raise my head, which was now beginning to ache terribly. To my surprise I found that it seemed to be fastened to the ground. Putting my right hand up for my left arm was under my body, I found my hair was frozen to the ice, through the blood which had flowed from a wound on my head.

Little by little I gradually released myself, and, looking about, found that I was pinned down by my dead horse, who was lying on my left leg. With the greatest difficulty I extricated myself from under him, and got to my feet after many attempts. Then I found that I could not move my left arm, and that my side was so painful that I

WOMEN GET MEDALS.

One Saved Father From Angry Bull, Other Rescued Maniac.

A despatch from London says: The King has conferred the Albert medal of the second class on Amy Madeline Jacques, who seized a mad bull by the horns and saved the lives of her father and brother, who had been gored by the animal. Hilda Elizabeth Wolsev, a nurse, who climbed along a narrow gutter far above the ground and rescued an insane patient on the roof of Hanwell Asylum, has received a like reward from the King.

WARSHIPS IN COLLISION.

British Cruiser Inflexible Struck by the Bellerophon.

A despatch from Portland, England, says: The British battleship Bellerophon and the cruiser Inflexible were in collision on Saturday outside Portland harbor. The Inflexible was struck on the starboard bow, where she has a seven-foot hole below the waterline. Two of her compartments are flooded. The vessel is now in this harbor making preparations for docking. Capt. Trevelyan D. W. Napier, of the Bellerophon, and Capt. Charles L. Napier, of the Inflexible, are brothers.

AVIATOR'S TERRIBLE DEATH.

Cirri Fell 650 Feet in Presence of His Family.

A despatch from Voghera, Italy, says: The Italian aviator, Cirri, while making an aeroplane flight near here on Sunday, fell from a height of 650 feet and was killed. Twenty thousand persons, including Cirri's wife and children, were viewing the exhibition. Cirri used a Bleriot monoplane. He had completed a number of evolutions when suddenly the motor exploded and in a moment the wings of the machine were on fire. The aviator fell headlong from his seat.

MET DEATH IN HELEN MINE.

Workman Drilling for a Blast When Earth and Rock Fell.

A despatch from Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., says: Louis Neime, aged twenty-two years, met almost instant death in the Helen Mine on Thursday. He was drilling for a blast when a portion of earth and rock between the 60 and 70-foot levels gave way and carried him with it. He was crushed about the chest and several ribs were broken. Neime leaves a widow, who resides here. The first report received was that six or seven men had been killed in the mine by an explosion.

THIRTEEN COWS KILLED.

Mr. James Rattray, of Carleton Place, Suffers Severe Loss.

A despatch from Carleton Place says: On the farm of Mr. James Rattray, about two miles from town, thirteen fine cows were killed as they huddled together when a storm came on. Mr. Rattray has but four head left, and these were some distance from the thirteen that were killed. His loss is quite serious, as nearly all were first-class milk cows. A barn belonging to Mr. W. J. Norris was shattered by lightning and scattered by the wind over a wide area. No portion of the building caught fire, but it was wrecked irreparably.

DR. RUTHERFORD RESIGNS.

Live Stock Commissioner is Going to the West.

A despatch from Ottawa says: Dr. J. G. Rutherford, Dominion Live Stock Commissioner and Veterinary Director-General of Canada, one of the most valued officials of the Dominion Government, has tendered his resignation to the Minister of Agriculture, and intends to go to British Columbia to reside. His resignation has not yet been accepted, and it is still hoped that he may be prevailed upon to continue in the office in which he has done invaluable work during the last five years.

Lack of Rain in New Brunswick Town Has Serious Effect.

A despatch from Newcastle, N.B., says: Several million logs have been abandoned on the Miramichi for lack of rain. The tie-up is that of the D. and J. Ritchie Co., on the Sevege. None of the Upper Miramichi drivers are yet in safe waters.

WHAT HE WAS AT.

attracted by a band of wild horses, which I saw outside my fence, about half a mile away, near a meadow in which my horses were grazing. As I looked, the lord and master of the band, a fine black stallion, leapt the fence. I ran down the hill to the meadow, but too late; the horse had jumped back, followed by a valuable grey mare of mine, and, regaining the band, galloped away with them.

I knew that if I did not cut my mare off from the rest of the horses there was small chance of my ever seeing her again. In less than five minutes I was in the saddle, galloping madly after the fast retreating band, which had now reached the fringe of trees at the foothills and were rapidly disappearing into the forest beyond. For hour after hour I continued the chase—through valleys and forests, over hills and across plains. At length, about two o'clock, I drew rein and reluctantly gave up the chase. For a couple of hours I rested with my horse by the side of a small river, when suddenly, about four o'clock, the trumpet-like blast of a wild stallion startled me to my feet, and there, only a few yards away, was my mare with the rest of the horses. They were gone like a flash and I, like a fool, decided to my everlasting regret, to follow them.

But again I saw the chase was hopeless, and had decided to give it up when one of the reins suddenly gave way, and I was practically at the mercy of my steed. He took advantage of this, and rushed madly after the flying horses. I was powerless, so all I could do was to stick to the saddle. Which direction we were going I knew not nor cared, for most of my time was taken up with dodging trees and drawing my feet up to avoid getting caught in projecting branches. Suddenly, in the fast gathering dusk, before me lay a sheet of ice some thirty feet long.

A TERRIBLE PREDICAMENT.

At the pace we were travelling it leased myself, and, looking about, found that I was pinned down by my dead horse, who was lying on my left leg. With the greatest difficulty I extricated myself from under him, and got to my feet after many attempts. Then I found that I could not move my left arm, and that my side was so painful that I could scarcely breathe.

I picked my way along the trail, and, to make a long story short, after a very trying journey, walking the last ten miles in a heavy snowstorm, I arrived at my cabin utterly exhausted.

FEARFUL INJURIES.

It was ultimately found that my left cheek bone was smashed, my arm was broken in three places, my elbow fractured and dislocated, besides three ribs being broken. I had to lie in my bed for three weeks; all this time very heavy snowstorms were raging, and it was impossible for anyone to go either up or down the creek. Then I was taken down in a sleigh, where I saw Dr. Williams, who could do nothing for me as my arm had been set, and I could not bend it or use it at all. Finally, I came to England and went into King's College Hospital where Mr. William Rose (now Sir William) made a false joint by breaking the arm again, so now I can use it to a limited extent.

In conclusion I might add that, as near as I could judge, I lay under my horse insensible from 6 p.m. to midnight. I arrived at my cabin twenty-four hours later, having walked forty miles and had nothing to eat for forty-eight hours.

EFFECT BUT NO CAUSE.

"So there's another rupture of Mount Vociferous," said Mrs. Partington, as she put on her specs. "The paper tells us about the burning lather running down the mountains, but it don't tell how it got afire."

Moderation is one thing that is rare in the extreme.

MAN SHOT IN COLD BLOOD

Murdered on a Toronto Street by a Former Neighbor

A despatch from Toronto says: James Loughhead, age sixty-two, of 63 Laplante avenue, formerly a printer, died in St. Michael's Hospital at noon on Monday with four bullets in his body. Joseph Jessimane, age forty-three, of 69 Marlboro' avenue, elevator operator at the Toronto General Postoffice, is under arrest charged with murder. According to the police, the murder is the culmination of a long-standing feud between the two men, which arose from a real estate deal in which Jessimane claims he was financially ruined by Loughhead. Lately, Jessimane says, Loughhead has been circulating false reports about him, which were injurious to his reputation.

The desperate act, which Jessimane readily admits having done to the police, was committed at the corner of Hayter street and Laplante avenue at 8 o'clock on Monday morning. For twenty minutes

Jessimane waited, walking up and down until his victim came out of the house. When Loughhead finally appeared, carrying a ladder, a few words passed between the two men, Jessimane being reported to have said: "Do you want to ruin my house?" Then the older man turned and ran, and Jessimane fired five shots from a revolver he had been carrying in his pocket. Loughhead fell to the sidewalk, four of the bullets having taken effect, while the other man mounted his bicycle and began to ride off, but was quickly seized by passersby. The revolver, still smoking, was taken from him, and it was found to contain one cartridge. The man, however, made no resistance, repeating that the other "had ruined his life," and that he did not care now what happened to him. He was held until the arrival of the police from the Agnes Street station.

Presentation.

Mr. Carleton Woods, census commissioner, was recently the recipient of two very handsome presents from the several enumerators who are associated with him in taking the census of the county for 1911. For the purposes of instructions the list of enumerators was divided into two classes, and at the completion of their instructions each class made him a handsome present as a token of appreciation of his efforts to simplify matters by a careful explanation before the work commenced. A most beautiful, as well as a most comfortable, Morris chair was the gift of the first class, while a handsome four hundred day clock was the presentation of the second class. Mr. Woods highly appreciates the gifts, not alone for their intrinsic value, but more for the kind feelings which prompted them, and in years to come the appearance of these kindly tokens many times will remind him of this, one of the most pleasant events of his life.

Opera House To-night.

That old, old story, so new to present day theatregoers, "slavery days" will be realistically interpreted at the opera house this evening, June 2nd, by Stetson's spectacular "Uncle Tom's Cabin" company. For this season the members of the Stetson company were selected especially for his or her adaptability to the roles essayed. The result has been a rarely harmonious whole, it is claimed, which has done much to add to the effectiveness of the scenery painted especially for this revival, includes a number of handsome scenes reproduced from pictures of the localities mentioned in the book, as they were at the time when the great authoress first wrote the story more than fifty years ago. Some of the most notable of these scenes are the "Swanee River by moonlight, cotton fields in full bloom, the Ohio River in winter, and the escape of Eliza, carrying her child across the floating ice, the rocky pass in which George Harris made his stand against the men pursuing him and protected his family; the St. Clair plantation home, the levee at New Orleans showing a slave auction; Legree's plantation, and lastly, the beautiful transformation scene, showing Eva's ascension to the Celestial City. The play has long since been public property and has been played by many poor companies until the public has come to recognize the fact that none but Manager Washburn has the great unequalled organization, and that is why his Stetson production always brings out the theatregoing crowd.

Annual Meeting.

A joint meeting of the Swastika Yacht and Motor Club and the Canoe Club, was held on Friday evening, May 26th, at the Public Library, Napanee. There was a good attendance of enthusiasts from Deseronto as well as from Napanee. The two clubs have been considering the advisability of joining together, with the idea of making one strong working club, and it was definitely decided at this meeting, that they would amalgamate under the Swastika Yacht, Motor and Canoe Club, of Napanee and Deseronto. The following officers were elected:

Commodore—T. J. Warren, Deseronto.

Vice Commodore—Alf. Holmes, Napanee.

Sec-Treas—Mark Graham, Napanee. Sailing Fleet Captain—T. J. Naylor, Deseronto.

Motor Boat Fleet Captain—George Blewett, Napanee.

Canoe Fleet Captain—F. Chenoweth, Napanee.

FIRST BASE BALL GAME

Western Church—10
Trinity Church—7

The first of the series of games in the Church Base Ball League was played at the Driving Park, on Monday evening. The game was called to start at 5.30 p. m., but owing to some preliminary work it was just about six o'clock when the teams took the field. There were quite a number of spectators present, among them being a good representation of the scholars from the different Sunday Schools, and the enthusiasm shown speaks well for the success of this league during the summer. Considering the fact that this is the first game this season, and all the players are Juniors, the quality of ball produced was first-class and very creditable to both the players and their managers. It would not be fair to criticize any of the boys for errors, or yet to single out any of them for special merit—they all did well—and just here we will remark that there certainly seems to be some good material among the boys which in time should develop into a good senior team.

Following is a schedule of each team and their positions on the field:

KEEPING YOUNG

Oatmeal is Said to Ward Off Age—Often 20 Years

Two noted scientists, by experiments on animals, have proved that youthfulness depends on the thyroid gland. And that something in oats seems to feed that gland.

It appears that old age can be deferred many years by caring for this gland. The main care is to feed it, and the proper food is oats.

Oats contain more energy food, more food for the brain, more food for the nerves, than any other grain that grows. And now it seems that they also serve to keep one young.

But common oatmeal isn't good enough for such an important diet. The rich, plump grains alone are used in the making of Quaker Oats. They are selected by 62 siftings, and only ten pounds are obtained from a bushel.

Quaker Oats means just the cream of the oats made delicious. It costs but one-half cent per dish.

Made in Canada.

Edward Carr, who on Saturday, May 20th, was the perpetrator of a number of serious offences at Belleville was up for trial on Monday. He pleaded guilty of attempting to shoot his brother-in-law, Burton Reppard. It was shown that three or four chambers of the five were loaded, and that fortunately Carr clicked the trigger on the empty chamber. Before he could pull the trigger again Reppard seized the weapon and put it in his pocket. Carr also pleaded guilty to attempting to commit suicide at the police station by hanging himself with his braces. He was then sentenced to 22 months in the Central Prison for attempting shooting and six months for the attempt at suicide, the latter to run concurrently.

Ten minute talks in St. Andrews' Presbyterian church during the next few weeks:

1. Is there another Life?
2. What does the Bible say about heaven and adapting one's self to it?
3. Shall we know one another?
4. Shall we be obliged to endure uncongenial people in heaven?
5. Do the dead know what their friends or enemies on earth are doing?
6. Hell.

On Sunday, May 28th, Judge Price will complete his thirty-third year on the bench as county judge of Frontenac. In May 1878, he ascended the bench as judge of the county of Frontenac.

Bitten more than ten years ago by a dog, its teeth penetrating the bone, a New York girl has just had her ninth operation to cure her of lameness, resulting from the wound which has not healed.

On Sunday, Judge C. J. V. Price completed his thirty-third anniversary as county judge for Frontenac. The anniversary was celebrated in a very quiet way, it being the Sabbath day. Judge Price regards each year completed in his position as another in which he has endeavored to serve his county in the way he thinks best. He takes no credit upon himself for having held the one position so long but goes on weighing the scales of justice as carefully as he ever did.

"What's flour gluten, Bud?"
"It's what makes your dough rise, Rose."
"Yes"—she encouraged.
Added Bud very sagely:
"Makes it rise in the mixer and expand in the oven. It's the elastic part of flour—absorbs all the water and milk"—and things."
Rose grew interested.
"FIVE ROSES, said Bud, is exceedingly rich in gluten. I s'pose because it's all made from Manitoba wheat. Takes up a lot more water—makes those fat loaves—lasts longer too."
"Saves money, doesn't it?" asked Rose.
Bud in a big voice:
"The fat loaf makes the fat pocketbook."
Use FIVE ROSES always.
And Rose said YES.
